ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF MYSORE.

ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR 1939-40.

PART I—ADMINISTRATIVE.

Dr. M. H. Krishna continued to be the Director of Archaeology in addition to his full-time professorial duties at the University. The scales of pay of several officials were revised with effect from 1st July 1939. The post of copyist was abolished and that of Junior Technical Assistant newly sanctioned. Mr. B. Venkoba Rao, B.A., Architectural Assistant, went on combined leave preparatory to retirement from the 1st July 1939 and retired from service with effect from 10th October 1939. The post of the Architectural Assistant has remained vacant since then. Proposals to fill up the post are now with Government. Mr. R. Rama Rao, B.A., Assistant to the Director, went on a month's privilege leave from 19th April 1940. Mr. L. Narasimhachar, M.A., Junior Technical Assistant, was placed in charge of the duties of the Assistant to the Director in addition to his own duties during this period.

During the early part of July, the Director-General of Archaeology in India paid a visit to the State, inspected several monuments and ancient sites and made several proposals for improving the department. These are with Government and certain items of work have already been taken on hand. The ancient sites of Chandravalli and Brahmagiri were surveyed jointly by the Director-General and the Director of Archaeological Researches and in accordance with the suggestions of the Director-General, some of the prospective spots were marked for trial excavations. The results of digging have been beyond expectations and it is now hoped that further excavations in the selected areas on scientific lines would be most fruitful so far as the early history of Mysore is concerned. A brief report on the Excavation work done during the year is included in Part IV of the Report.

For the purpose of collecting inscriptions and information about architecture and also for inspecting the ancient monuments for conservation purposes, the Director toured in parts of Mysore, Hassan, Chitaldrug and Shimoga Districts. The Assistant to the Director toured in parts of Mysore, Hassan, Kadur and Tumkur Districts for collecting and copying inscriptions.

Among the ancient sites and monuments studied during the year were those at Varuṇa, Bangalore, Gaṅgavāḍi, Māchalaghaṭṭa, Bēchirāk Hosūr, Śrīrāmanhaḷḷi, Bōgāvi, Nāgamaṅgala, Dodḍetka, Mudigere, Araṇi, Bellūr, Daḍaga, Keḷagere, Grāma, Hōdigere and Naṅjangūḍ. Varuṇa appears to have been an important Jaina settlement of the Gaṅga period. The Jain images discovered on and in the immediate vicinity of the site of the ruined basti are good works of art, though it is possible that they may belong to a period much later than Śrīpurusha Gaṅga whose inscriptions have been discovered in the village. But perhaps a very interesting structure at the place is the Mahalingēśvara temple which belongs to about the 10th century A. D. It has some good carving work, though built of granite. Most of the monuments inspected in the Nāgamaṅgala Taluk belong to the Hoysala and later periods. The Mallēśvara temple at Māchalaghaṭṭa has some good ceiling work. Bōgāvi appears to have been an important Jaina agrahāra town during the twelfth century A. D. Daḍaga too seems to be a place of considerable antiquity. The Yōgā-Narasimha temple in the place contains pillars resembling those at the Nonabēśvara temple at Nonavinakere. At Keḷagere was discovered a pillar similar to the 'Gāruḍa pillar' at Agrahāra Bāchaḷḷi with three faces of its base covered with inscriptions. This place also seems to have been an important Jaina settlement during the twelfth century. The tomb of Shāji, father of the famous Śivaji, at Hōdigere, is another important discovery during the year. Measures are being taken to conserve the monument.

With the co-operation of the Department of Public Works and the Bēlūr and Halebīd Temples' Renovation Committee, the renovation work at Bēlūr and Halebīd was continued during the year.

Conservation. Proposals for further work at Bēlūr are now being worked out and are in the course of submission to Government. A committee has also been proposed to study the present state of the Gōmaṭēśvara colossus at Śravaṇa-belgoḷa with a view to counteract the disintegration of the monument. Opinions from experts have been called for and the Archæological Chemist with the Government of India has kindly sent in his analysis of the stone out of which the image is carved. It is hoped that some preliminary remedial measures would be taken at present in the matter of conserving the statue. As usual, several estimates were received for repairs to the ancient monuments in the State and were countersigned after scrutiny. Periodical reports in connection with the tour notes of the Dewan were submitted. Among the estimates scrutinised and countersigned, those pertaining to the following monuments may be mentioned:—

1. Lakshmi-Narasimha Temple, Bhadrāvati.
2. Trikuṭēśvara Temple, Gorūr.
3. Śrikanṭhēśvara Temple, Naṅjangūḍ.
4. Siddhēśvara Temple, Maḷali.
5. Kōlāramma Temple, Kōlār.

6. Sōmēśvara Temple, Kōlār.
7. Mokbara, Kōlār.
8. Gaṇḍabhērūṇḍa Pillar at Belgāvi.
9. Raṅganātha Temple at Raṅgasthala.

Proposals regarding the reclassification of the ancient monuments in the State are now before Government.

About fifty inscriptions were collected during the year. The majority of them have been edited in Part VII of the Report under the Director's guidance by Mr. R. Rama Rao assisted by the Pandits. Of these, a record on the pedestal of a stone image of Chaudēśvari in a ruined temple at Lakkunda, Bēlūr Taluk, belongs to the eighth century and states that the image is of Vāsantikādēvī and was consecrated by one Mallidēva of Nakkunda. The image has four hands, holding sword, bowl, trident and drum, which are the attributes of a Śaiva goddess. The tradition, however, regarding the Hoysalas would make Vāsantikā a Jain goddess. The central figure in the Vāsantikā temple at Angaḍi is that of Vaishnavī (M.A.R., 1936, p. 17). A bronze tripod was found in the Kēśava temple at Bēlūr and belongs to the Hoysala times as testified to by an inscription in Kaunḍa characters of the 13th century which states that Kumāra Lakshmīdhara got this made for the God Vijaya-Nārāyaṇa at Beluhūr. This Kumāra Lakshmīdhara was a general under the Hoysala king Ballāla II (1173-1220), and he immolated himself at the death of his master.

A stone inscription at Hora Maraḷi in the Mysore Taluk refers to the grant of a village to a Brahmin named Naṅjaṇṇa Vāranāsi by Prince Kaṇṭhīraṇḍa Mahīpāla during the reign of his father Dēvarāja Oḍeyar, King of Mysore. Dēvarāja Oḍeyar ruled from 1659 to 1672 and had two sons, the elder being the famous Chikka Dēvarāja Oḍeyar who succeeded him and the younger being Kaṇṭhīraṇḍa Oḍeyar of the present grant. Tradition says that Chikka Dēvarāja Oḍeyar was for some time in exile at Hangala. There are a few grants made by the younger brother Kaṇṭhīraṇḍa.

Two inscriptions on the muḍis or jewelled crowns of Mēlukōṭe Chellapilleśvāmi and Naṅjaṇḍ Śrīkaṇṭhēśvarasvāmi and one on the golden belt of the former preserved in the Palace, were deciphered and are published in the Report with the kind permission of the Palace authorities.

More than two hundred coins of the Śātavāhana period collected at the Chandravalli excavations are being studied in detail at the office for publication in a subsequent report. A note prepared on the Pallava, Chēra and Kadamba coins in the possession of the department is published in Part V of the Report for the year.

About thirty-two palm-leaf manuscripts were received from a private gentleman of Kōlār. These are now being examined at the office.

Manuscripts.

They are of varied interest and deal with architecture, sculpture, dancing and the like. But they are mostly incomplete and cannot be reviewed without the help of other copies.

More than two hundred antiquities from Mohenjodaro were acquired for the Office Museum and twenty plaster of Paris casts of Mohenjodaro seals were also got prepared through the generosity of the Director-General of Archaeology in India. Over eighty new books have been added to the Office Library.

Museum and library.

In connection with the Tenth Session of the All-India Oriental Conference held at Tirupati during the Easter Holidays, the department sent a representative collection of photographs, etc., to illustrate the history of art and architecture in Mysore and participated in the Conference Exhibition. The exhibition was well attended and the exhibits from Mysore were much appreciated by the members and delegates. A certificate of honour was granted by the Conference authorities.

Exhibition.

The Annual Report of the Department for 1938 was submitted to Government. That for 1939 was printed at the Government Branch Press, Mysore. The English, Kannada and Hindi versions of the Guide to Śravaṇabelgoḷa were published. The second edition of the Guide to Bēlūr was prepared and sent to the press. A guide to Nandi was also prepared and sent to the press.

Publications.

Owing to the retirement of Rao Bahadur M. Shama Rao and Mr. D. V. Gundappa from the Committee for the Presentation of Archaeological Publications, the latter was reconstituted as follows :—

1. The Vice-Chancellor (Chairman).
2. Mr. V. L. D'Souza, B.A., B.COM. (London).
3. Mr. N. Balakrishnaiah B.A., B.L.
4. The Director of Archaeological Researches.

* The receipts and expenditure of the department under budget heads amounted to Rs. 14,177-12-6 and Rs. 14,177-12-6 respectively. A sum of Rs. 218-2-0 was realised by the sale of the departmental publications and photographs during the year.

The success of the work of the department was rendered possible by the sincere co-operation of the Office staff.

PART II—CONSERVATION.

Conservation Notes of the Director of Archæological Researches in Mysore, Mysore, for the year 1939-40.

MYSORE DISTRICT.

MYSORE TALUK.

Varuna.

The Jain images lying about uncared for among the hedges in the vicinity of the basti site deserve to be preserved in a museum.

Basti site.

Similarly a Jaina epitaph lying in a field to the west of the site and a Gaṅga inscription at the entrance to the village may be removed to a museum or preserved in one of the temples at the place.

The Mahalingēśvara temple which is a genuine structure of the tenth century A. D. has some good carving work. The interior of the temple, particularly, requires to be looked after better. The roof is leaky and requires immediate attention. The outer walls need cement-pointing in several places. The ground around the temple may be levelled up and cleared of vegetation.

Mahalingesvara temple.

BANGALORE DISTRICT.

Fort, Bangalore City.

The guard rooms in the quadrangle of the fort are very dilapidated and look ugly. They may be removed and the place tidied up.

Guard rooms.

The trees and plants that are growing up on the west cross wall of the outworks may be cut down. Their roots may dislodge the wall.

Fort walls.

MANDYA DISTRICT.

NAGAMANGALA TALUK.

Machalaghatta.

The Mallēśvara temple is in a very dilapidated condition. The outer walls of the navaraṅga have in many places collapsed and in others quite out of plumb. Since, however, the navaraṅga ceilings are good pieces of art, some sort of restoration of the temple seems desirable. Further decay at least may be prevented by effecting repairs wherever possible.

Mallesvara Temple.

Bogavi.

The basti is almost completely ruined. Many of the walls have fallen down and the stones have been removed. Further removal of the stones should be prevented since the cornice stones all round the temple contain inscriptions. The large inscription slab lying in a hedge to the east of the temple may be preserved within the temple and the local authorities instructed to take care of it.

Basti.

Devalapura.

The Lakshmī-Nārāyaṇasvāmi temple at the place is a Muzrai institution with about Rs. 4,000 at its credit. Though it is generally intact, the roof is leaky and the unplastered brick structure above requires immediate attention. Rain water pours through the crevices in some portions of the garbhagriha, vestibule and navaraṅga. The southern outer wall of the navaraṅga has sunk in the middle, breaking under its weight one of the cornices. This may be looked into early. The compound wall requires to be completely rebuilt.

Lakshmi-Narayana-svami temple.

Cholasandra.

The solitary basti standing outside the village and at a little distance from the road does not require conservation, since there are no images or much ornamental work in it. The only thing worth preserving is the beautiful stone inscription lying in front of the basti. It may be set up in upright position on its own pedestal which is lying close by.

Basti.

Dodjetka.

The Kēśava temple standing in the centre of the village is not important from the archæological point of view. But the villagers have walled up the navaraṅga with rubble and mud walls and are keen on getting the temple repaired. The stone structure is all intact. With the concrete on the roof repaired, the temple would serve a useful purpose for the villagers.

Mudigere.

The Kallēśvara temple to the south-east of the village is completely ruined.

Kallesvara temple.

Inside its navaraṅga, there are some beautiful sculptures of the Hoysaḷa period. These may be removed to the village and preserved.

A large viragal of the Gaṅga times is lying to the south of the village. It may be placed in upright position. A fragmentary Gaṅga inscription lying at the entrance to the village may also be removed and preserved along with the images.

Arani.

The ruined temple of Virabhadra which stands amidst the rice fields to the south of the ancient tank bund enshrines some good images which are definitely of the Hoysaḷa period. An image of Mahishāsuramardini having an inscription on its pedestal is lying uncared for by the side of the tank bund. These images deserve preservation in a better place, preferably in a museum.

Virabhadra temple.

The Gōpālakrishṇa temple standing in the village is not a Muzrai institution. It enjoys a grant of five acres of land. Though it is generally intact, its roof is leaky in many places. Some minor repairs like cement-pointing, etc., may be effected and the ugly mud walls in the porch removed. The approach to the temple may also be improved and the surroundings cleaned.

Gopalakrishna temple.

Dadaga.

The Chennakēśava temple at the place is in a woefully ruined condition and more neglected than ruined. The pātālāṅkaṇa is used as a public cow-shed and the compound including part of the navaraṅga as a latrine, while around the temple thorny plants abound. A few of the ceiling stones of the navaraṅga have fallen down and many have cracked. It looks safer to open out the north and south ankaṇas completely, retaining the central ankaṇa. The main temple also is much injured. It could be saved perhaps if the tower is removed. The eastern part of the temple including the pātālāṅkaṇa is more injured and could be easily saved for public use as a meeting place, etc., if the roof is made watertight and the floor levelled and the place kept clean. If worship is revived in the temple, it would perhaps be put to better form.

Kelagere.

The tall pillar standing in the village is an important monument of the Hoysala period. Its capital has been brought down and is lying near the pillar. It may be preserved in a safe place.

The Mallikārjuna temple standing on the other side of the tank is much dilapidated. The villagers may be encouraged to renovate it.

Mallikarjuna temple. The inscription stones in the navaraṅga and on the lintel of the navaraṅga doorway declare the monument to be of the time of the Vijayanagar king Harihara I.

SHIMOGA DISTRICT.*CHENNAGIRI TALUK.*Hodigere.

The tomb of Shāji, father of the great Śivaji, lies to the north-west of the village. It was in a neglected condition until February 1940, when some Maratha gentlemen of Chennagiri and Shimoga got the platform covered over with plaster and cement, raising a small pyramid, about 3 feet high, in the centre. A small mandavare tree has grown to the west of the platform and threatens to damage it, though at the same time it is giving the tomb some shade in the afternoons. The old structure is of no architectural merit; but it would be becoming the memory of the great Shaji if the compound of the Lāyada-hola is acquired, levelled and walled off and a suitable pavilion is once again erected on the spot.

KADUR DISTRICT.*MUDIGERE TALUK.*Duggasandra.

The temple of Kāla-Bhairava has neither architectural beauty nor historical importance to justify its inclusion in the list of Ancient Monuments. It is said to be the only stone temple in the neighbourhood. Its roof is leaky and needs repairs. The temple does not seem to have much funds at its credit. Nor are there many devotees to subscribe for its repairs. It is for the Muzrai Department to consider the question of its repairs.

ANJANAPUR DIVISION.

1. REPAIRS TO SRI TRIPURANTAKESVARASWAMI TEMPLE AT BELAGAVI, SHIKARPUR TALUK.

The temple of Sri Tripurantakesvaraswami is one of the most important and of the fairly well preserved ancient monuments. The basement of the temple was very badly disturbed and sunk in several places. Necessary repairs to reset only the front portion to a uniform level, were got done in consultation with the Director of Archaeological Researches in Mysore. An estimate for Rs. 275 was sanctioned for the purpose and an outlay of Rs. 270 was incurred during the year 1939-40.

2. STRENGTHENING THE GANDA-BHERUNDA PILLAR AT BELAGAVI, SHIKARPUR TALUK.

The base of this pillar is enclosed by two heavy size stone masonry platforms with earth filling in between. The pillar developed a slantwise crack. With a view to strengthening the Ganda-Bherunda pillar, an estimate for Rs. 140 was got approved by the Superintending Engineer in consultation with the Director of Archaeological Researches. A small outlay of Rs. 4-6-0 was incurred during the year 1939-40. The rest of the works are under progress and nearing completion.

PART III—STUDY OF ANCIENT MONUMENTS AND SITES.

MYSORE DISTRICT.

Varuna.

Varuna is a wayside village seven miles to the east of Mysore and close to the T.-Narasipur road. It appears to have been a prosperous Situation and history. place in the Gaṅga period. The earliest known inscription at the place (E. C. Mysore 55) mentions a local chief ruling under Śrīpurusha in circa 780 A.D. But most of the antiquities are connected with the 10th century A.D.

OLD BASTI RUINS.

To the west of the present village is a rising slope on which there appear to have been a number of Jain temples. Strewn about in the fields and hedges were discovered here the remains of at least three Jaina shrines.

Ruined bastis.

A granite pillar, about one foot in diameter and six feet high, containing a Kannada inscription was found by the side of a hedge.

Epitaph. The top of the pillar is carved into a cone-shaped bud such as is found in similar Jain epitaphs in Bīṇḍiganavale and elsewhere.

Of the images (Pl. II), the one lying in the grounds of Māda, son of Ādikarnāṭaka Hebbeda Rāma, is a well carved group depicting Pārśvanātha seated on a pedestal with a high back and supported by attendants on either side (Pl. II, 1). The seven-hooded cobra spread over the head of the image is broken. Above it is a triple umbrella under a simhalalāṭa belonging to a serpentine tōraṇa. The group appears to belong to the 11th century A.D.

Images.

Of the other two images, one is a small standing image of a naked Tirthankara, Supārśvanātha, with a broken cobra and a triple umbrella over the head (Pl. II, 4). It has no inscription on the pedestal. The other image lying on the south and facing north is a large standing life-size image of potstone (Pl. II, 2). It is naked with an umbrella over the head and has an old Kannada inscription in several lines on the pedestal.

Round about lie half-buried in the earth or covered over by the hedge two pairs of Yakshas and Yakshīs. Among these, Dharaṇīndra (Pl. II, 3) and Padmāvatī can be identified.

It is said that the stones of the bastis were removed and used for the Kalyāṇi pond at Vorkūḍ.

MĀRI TEMPLE.

On the east side of the village is a temple of Māri facing north. The yard in front of the structure has a number of carved stones one of which bears the śaṅkha and chakra and has an inscription of the 14th century. Another similar inscription stone has a trisūla mark. These inscriptions have been published.

BASAVAṆṆA SHRINE.

To further east of the Māri temple stands a Basavaṇṇa shrine which faces directly west and has a granite pillar with a triple umbrella carved upon it. A pillar forming the south jamb of the terrace of the Basavaṇṇa shrine bears a vṛagal inscription in which a lady devotee is shown as worshipping a līṅga under which is a Basava. It bears an inscription of about the 10th century A.D., the upper half of which has been read by Rice and revised by Mr. Narasimhachar. Below the carved panel are found a few more lines. The inscription appears to be the epitaph of a Jain lady.

MAHADĒVĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

To the north-east of the village and west of the old tank, there is a group of three temples the largest of which is dedicated to Mahadēvēśvara. It is a structure of the 19th century A.D. built by Lakṣmīvilāsada Dēvammanṇi, one of the queens of Krishṇarāja Oḍeyar III. The inscription of the king is found on a stone slab in the mukha-maṇṭapa of the temple and records the construction of the tank and the temple.

In the navaraṅga of the temple are the images of Pārvatī, Nandī, Vidyā-
Images. Gaṇapati and Navanīta Nṛitta Kṛṣṇa near whom are placed a copper Sadāśiva group.

In the garbhagriha is a small round-headed līṅga of whitish brown
Līṅga. stone.

On the south-east pillar of the outer verandah is a relievo group depicting,
Bhakta figures. probably, Krishṇarāja Oḍeyar III and his two queens.

The northernmost shrine dedicated to Mahadēvammā is a small stone structure with the outer walls constructed of large slabs. It is said
Mahadevamma. that inside it there is a seated image of Durgā almost naked. On the south wall, there is said to be a large naked image with an inscription on the pedestal. Owing to some custom obtaining in the village, the door of the temple could not be opened and the inside studied. It is said that the door is opened only on such Tuesdays as fall between Sankrānti and Sivarātri in the months of January and February.

2. JINA, OLD BASTI RUINS, VARUNA (p. 19).

3. DHARAṆĪNDRA, OLD BASTI RUINS, VARUNA (p. 19).

4. SUPARŚVANATHA, OLD BASTI RUINS, VARUNA (p. 19).

MAHALINGĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

(Pl. III, 1).

An important and interesting structure at the place is a small granite temple called the Mahalingēśvara temple. The original name of the god appears to have been Bhūtēśvara. There are two inscriptions in front of the temple and another on a viragal inside the outer navaraṅga. These refer to circa 900 A.D. when a Chālukya prince by name Goggi appears to have interfered in a succession dispute between two local chiefs, Uttavagaḷḷa and Eḍavari, perhaps of the Ganga dynasty. Another inscription mentions a battle between Polukēsi, apparently some later Chālukya chief bearing that great name and Būtuga identified by Mr. Narasimbachar with Būtarasa, son of Nītimārga. The temple is of interest because it is a genuine structure of the 10th century A.D. with some good carving work.

History.

In the outer navaraṅga of the temple which is a later structure of 12 pillars, there are kept a number of interesting sculptures. One of them is a conical slab containing inscription No. Mysore 35, E.C. III, Mysore District. It mentions Mahāsāmanta Narasimha of the Chālukya family who was perhaps the father of Arikēsari, the patron of Ādi-Pampa, the famous Kannada poet of the 10th century A.D. It has three panels. The lowest depicts a vigorous battle between a corps of elephants and an army composed of footmen led by cavaliers. One of the elephants is ridden by royal personages, and the corps is led by a horseman with a sword in hand. The elephants and horses are vigorous and realistic and do credit to the art of the time. In the middle panel is seated between two attendants a high personality, perhaps Būtuga whose name the liṅga bears. In the top panel he is shown as worshipping the liṅga under a fine Dravidian type tōraṇa.

Next to this inscription is a group of Saptamātrikas, all independent images with small waists and large breasts, reminding us of similar groups at Narasamaṅgala and Hale-Ālūr.

The Mahishāsūramardīnī group (Pl. III, 3) in the same navaraṅga is evidently of the Gaṅga times. It shows the goddess as treading on the buffalo with her left foot, her waist being twisted, her breast held by an ornamental breast band, while śankha and chakra are held in the two outstretched fingers. The prabhāvalī is of the same stone and depicts the group of the eight Dikpālas in a fixed order with Indra in the centre and, to his right, Isāna, Vāyu, Varuṇa and Agni, and, to his left, Agni, Yama, Niruti and Kubēra. Each god is riding his vehicle with his consort. The style of work reminds us of the Araḷaguppe and Nandi types.

The rest of the temple consisting of the open vestibule and the small inside

navaraṅga is the original temple of the Gaṅga times. Its outer wall is cut up by pilasters having cushion-shaped mouldings above the neck. The vestibule doorway which has creeper scroll ornamentation on the jambs has above it a rounded cornice with horse-shoe shaped arches in front, a row of swans below and a small Gaja-Lakshmī group above it.

The most interesting feature of the temple is the existence of a frieze (Pl. III, 2) of beautifully sculptured Paurāṇic panels just underneath the eaves which are themselves ornamented with horse-shoe shaped arches. The frieze runs right round the temple, commencing just above the east doorway of the old temple and illustrates scenes from the Rāmāyaṇa as follows :—

East wall—

- (1) Rāvaṇa hears of Rāma. Rāvaṇa abducts Sītā.

South wall—

- (2) Rāvaṇa.
- (3) Rāvaṇa performing a sacrifice.

The granite pillars of the inner navaraṅga have a round shaft of the Gaṅga type resembling the Pātāla-Brahmadēva pillar in front of Gōmatēśvara and the pillars in the first shrine on the smaller hill at Śravaṇabelgoḷa. On the ceilings of the navaraṅga and the open vestibule are carved lotuses in very high relief. The garbhagriha doorway has its jambs ornamented with creeper scrolls.

Vajamangala.

The village of Vajamangala is situated about a mile and a half to the north-west of Varuṇa. There are two principal temples in the place of which one is dedicated to Aṅkanāthēśvara and the other to Sōmēśvara.

Situation.

ANKANĀTHĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

The Aṅkanāthēśvara temple appears to be a plain granite structure of about the 13th or 14th century with an image of Bhairava in the garbhagriha. There is a natural liṅga by its side called Aṅkanāthēśvara. To the south-west of the temple is a stone oil mill bearing an inscription of Vīra Narasimha III.

SŌMĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

The Sōmēśvara temple is immediately to the north-west of the Aṅkanāthēśvara temple. It is a triple-celled structure with its outer walls built of bricks. The low roof and the appearance of the navaraṅga suggest that this temple is like the structures met with in many parts of the Dāvāngere Taluk and described in the Annual Report of the department for 1939 (pp. 88 ff.).

General description.

The common navaraṅga into which all the three cells lead is supported on four cylindrical pillars, small in size but resembling the pillars at Narasamangala. In the hall are kept the stone images of the Saptamātrikas, Gaṇēśa, Sūrya, Umāmahēśvara, Viṣṇu, etc. Some of the images appear to be recent, while the older images are worn out.

Nanjangud.

NANJUNDEŚVARA TEMPLE.

Nanjangūd is a little town situated 16 miles south of Mysore at the confluence of the river Guṇḍlu with Kapinī or Kapilā which pours into the Kāverī river near T.-Narsipur. The town is the centre of a taluk of the same name and has now a population of nearly 8,000 and is a very important place of pilgrimage. During its annual festivals in the months of March and April, it attracts very large crowds of pilgrims from the neighbouring districts. The chief attraction of course is the great temple of Nañjuṇḍēśvara (Pl. IV, 1) which is situated at the eastern extremity of the town not far from the slopes leading to the confluence. During the floods, the two rivers meet within a hundred yards of the temple.

Situation.

Structures belonging to about half a dozen different periods commencing from the 13th and 14th centuries can be found in the Nañjuṇḍēśvara temple. (Pl. V).

History.

The original and oldest part of the temple consists of the garbhagriha, the vestibule with its pradakṣhiṇā and the raṅgamantapa to which may be added also the stone-built portions of the inner mahādvāra and the dīpastambha. The Nañjuṇḍēśvara or the Śrīkaṇṭhēśvara līṅga is a low and medium-sized natural līṅga, placed on a low pedestal. The garbhagriha is a plain one with walls of roughly dressed, but well adjusted, granite blocks. Around it, except on the east, runs a narrow closed-in pradakṣhiṇā which is provided with three stone windows having cruciform or pond-shaped perforations. The outer walls of the sanctum are plain with roughly shaped pilasters, the spaces between which are covered over with plaster. The lower part of the walls contains a sloping cornice and an octagonal cornice; but the bottom is hidden by plaster filling. The outer wall of the pradakṣhiṇā has ornamental right-angled pilasters surmounted by a series of sharply curved eaves, ornamented with half-carved and uncarved kīrtimukha arches and a parapet base which appears to have a series of lion-faced sea-horses. On the south wall are carved three panels consisting of the Nañjuṇḍēśvara līṅga under a canopy, Nandi facing it and a royal couple in devotional attitude (Pl. IV, 3) generally pointed out as Yadurāya and his queen, but probably much older and coeval with the temple. The door leading to the pradakṣhiṇā on the south has been filled in with plaster so that there is only one inlet in the north-west corner of the vestibule.

The vestibule is a plain structure with two cylindrical granite pillars supporting its roof. The doorways which are perhaps plain are covered over with silver plating.

The navaraṅga in its original form consisted of a hall supported by twelve pillars of undoubted 13th century Hoysala workmanship. Four of these have cylindrical plain shafts, while the four others that are now visible are of varied shapes. One is sixteen-pointed. A second is an octagon with three series of caryatid bracket figures. Both of these have the corners of their bases ornamented with cobra-hooded mouldings. Two other pillars are high ornate modifications of the thirty-two fluted types with braided chain ornamentation, and they remind one of the pillars in the Phalguṇēśvara temple at Kaivāra, near Nandi. The brackets over these pillars are of the imitation ribbed pattern, common in Hoysala work of the 13th century.

This hall appears to have been extended by one ankana on the east and to have been divided up into a number of cells, each containing a linga. Most of the latter appear to bear the names of the queens of Kṛṣṇarāja Oḍeyar III. The most important of the cells, however, contains a metallic group of Śiva as Chandraśekhara. The face of the image is rubbed out to smoothness by continuous rubbing and washing. In the navaraṅga are kept the images of Gaṇapati, Durgā and Saptamātrikās, who are not attended by any other figures.

A few yards to the east of the navaraṅga stands the inner mahādvāra, with a granite doorway, surmounted by a brick tower. The "simha-lalāṭas" which ornament its exterior, the cruciform shafted pillars with their mango drops and smaller pillars carved on lion-bases, and the finely carved bull, elephant and horse on the inner face of the benches inside the mahādvāra, suggest that it is a structure of the late Hoysala or early Vijayanagar period. The mahādvāra was probably built between 1250 A.D. and 1400 A.D.

To this period also belongs the large eight-fluted granite lamp-pillar which is now placed near the bull of Vikramarāja. Between the navaraṅga doorway and the inner mahādvāra, to the west of the wooden dhvajastambha, stands a balipīṭha on which there is said to have been an inscription (Ep. Car. Mysore Supplement No. Nanjangud 280, not traceable now), of the time of Hariyappa Oḍeyar, probably identifiable with Harihara I of Vijayanagar. If it is this prince, then the date would be C. 1342—1350.

Inside the inner prākāra were constructed, probably in the 14th century, the shrines of Pārvatī and Viṣṇu and Chāṇḍikēśvara. The former contains an image of the goddess, holding a kamala and a kumuda. The arch or tōrana above the goddess has a serpentine band connecting it with the 14th century. The Viṣṇu shrine is characterless and the image is a poorly carved piece in darkish stone, which does not appear to be the original image. The figure is that of Janārdana holding padma, chakra, śankha and gadā, but is called Kēśava.

In the days of the Vijayanagar emperors and perhaps by Kṛṣṇadēvarāja whose inscription of 1529 is to be found on the back-wall of the Viśvēśvara shrine, was added an outer verandah in which are now installed Viśvēśvara, Subrahmaṇyēśvara and other deities.

Vijayanagar period.

In 1643 A.D. Daḷavoy Vikramarāja, Prince Commander of the Mysore Forces, got made and set up the beautiful bull (Pl. IV, 2) which is now found in the mukhamantapa of the temple bearing his inscription on its pedestal. The bull is large, finely carved and ornamented and beautifully finished and is an object that attracts notice as soon as one enters the temple.

To the left of the Pārvatī shrine is installed a greenish jadite līṅga, about nine inches high, called Pachche līṅga or Pādsha līṅga which is said to have been installed at the orders of Tipu Sultan.

In this shrine is also placed a stone image of Pārvatī standing (abhaya, kanta, pāsa, dāna) which is said to have been used as a substitute for receiving the mutilations of iconoclasts and placed in front of a wall covering the Pārvatī image.

Such appears to have been the condition of the buildings until about 1839 when H. H. Mahārāja Kṛṣṇarāja Oḍeyar III of Mysore devoted his resources to make his contributions to this temple, as seen from an inscription of his above the outer mahādvāra, his bhakta-vigraha in the south prākāra and the names of the numerous līṅgas and images in the outer prākāra.

The most interesting of these contributions are the images, particularly those of the family of the royal donor (Pl. I, Frontispiece), directly opposite to the shrine of the utsavamūrti and facing it through the south door of the navaraṅga. The portrait of the royal donor is an extraordinarily successful piece of sculpture which is a standing example of the art of the time. The Mahārāja who is supported on each side by two queens stands upright being bare footed and fully dressed, and with his hands folded in reverence. He wears a well shaped large (pāgu) turban, whiskered moustaches, holes for ear-rings, necklets and necklaces, bracelets, a Moghul type long coat, armlets of a checkered and floral pattern, uttarīyam taken over his left shoulder with ends being coiled round his waist, sword scabbard, dagger in sheath, Paṭhan type trousers with floral pattern, anklets and a single jingled anklet on the right ankle. The figure generally resembles the pictures of Kṛṣṇarāja Oḍeyar III in his younger days. On the pedestal appears the inscription:—

Alida Mahāsvāmi Kṛṣṇarājarāvaru.

His queens have their hair tied in a bundle to the right and wear turubu (Tamil: śorpu), large ear-rings, aḍḍike, bandi and tāli, and finely patterned and skirted saris. They stand with folded hands. On the pedestals appear their names which are as follows from the east:—

1. Ramāvilāsada Cheluvājammanṇiyāvaru.
2. Lakshmīvilāsada Dēvājammanṇiyāvaru.
3. Kṛṣṇāvilāsada Līṅgājammanṇiyāvaru.
4. Samukhadatōṭṭi Sannidhānada Muddakṛṣṇammanṇiyāvaru.

To the left of the last named queen and facing east, stands the image of Nañjarāja Bahadūr, a boyish figure, wearing trousers, long coat, kammarband and Marāṭha-styled turban. He was the natural son of the king and was popularly known as Dēvapārthiva. While the queens wear kunkumam on their foreheads, the king and prince wear no caste mark, but they have square signet rings on their little fingers. There are similar portrait sets of Krishṇarāja Oḍeyar III and his family at Chāmarājanagar, the Chāmuṇḍi Hill and the Kṛishṇasvāmi temple at Mysore. But the Nañjangūḍ set appears to be the largest of them all.

In front of the inner mahādvāra to the east extends a large pillared maṇṭapa whose nucleus appears to be the lamp pillar, around which there is a small square pavilion with straight sloping eaves. This is known as Basavanakatte, more probably because it housed formerly the large Basava of Vikramarāya than because the small bull known as Channabasava is now installed in it.

Basavanakatte.

At the back of this large maṇṭapa there stands a shrine of Tāṇḍayēśvara facing south. It contains a fine copper group of Śiva as Andhakāsurasamhāri.

Tandavesvara shrine.

Among the several additional shrines may be mentioned a Navagraha shrine installed by a Vaiśya gentleman in recent times. It contains the image of Sūrya surrounded by those of the Grahas or planets made by Mr. Siddalingasvami of Mysore. The Navagraha images are finely made and show an attempt to imitate some features of Hoysaḷa sculpture.

Navagraha shrine.

We may now proceed to study the long rows of sculptures, images and liṅgas that are placed in the shrines of the inner verandah of the outer prakāra, commencing from the south-east, where exist the two kitchens of the temple. First, there is a row of stone images of the sixty-three Śaiva saints. The images are encrusted with a thick coat of wax which makes them look ugly. But if exhibited in a clean condition, they will perhaps bring credit to the sculptural work of Mysore during the 19th century.

Prakara shrines.

The saints are in the following order, their striking peculiarities, if any, being noted against their names. They are generally in groups of three, each group having a set of three copper images for procession purposes and being fixed on wooden platforms. The copper images are also good, but the stone ones are better. The copper images have not been arranged so as to correspond with the stone ones in the several shrines.

To the east of the steps leading to the terrace extends a long verandah which contains the most interesting sculptures in the temple.

Sivalila images.

As stated in the 'Vamśāvali of the Mysore Kings,' these images appear to have been set up by Kṛṣṇarāja III.

Their general design and excellence of finish prove that Mysore was yet famous for its sculpture in the second quarter of the 19th century and that its great art died out during the days of the Commission. Each image with its prabhāvali is about 5 feet high. The images show the līlās of Śiva and are as follows commencing from the west :—

1. Chandraśekhara with Pārvatī.
2. Umāmahēśvara—seated.
3. Vṛṣabhārūḍha—with the couple riding the bull.
4. Tāṇḍavēśvara with Pārvatī, treading on a demon. (Pl. XII, 1).
5. Girijākalyāṇamūrti—with Brahma and four other deities as witnesses. (Pl. XII, 2).
6. Bhikṣhāṇamūrti—with begging bowl in the left hand and feeding what looks like a deer in right hand and attended by a dwarf carrying a basket.
7. Kāmasambhāramūrti (Pl. XII, 3) with Manmattha riding on a parrot and shooting a floral arrow at Śiva (Pl. XIII, 1). Śiva's left hand holds a triangular dhvaja in which is carved a picture of Manmattha riding on a parrot.

Perhaps the largest and most majestic structure erected by Kṛishṇarāja Oḍeyar

III is the main mahādvāra of the temple. The mahādvāra or the main gate of the temple has a seven-storeyed tower above it. The doorway appears to be about 18 feet high and has the figures of the dvārapālas and Gaṅgā and Yamunā on the jambs. On the inner jambs are the images of Kālabhairava and Virabhadra. On the inner lintel is a long seven-line inscription in Kannada stating that the tower was constructed in about 1845 A. D., by Dēvājammā, wife of Chāmarāja Oḍeyar and mother of Kṛishṇarāja Oḍeyar III. The walls have relieve carvings of simhalalāṭas and of musicians, dancers and wrestlers in various poses. The pillars of the mahādvāra are like those in the Gaṅgādhareśvara temple at Seringapatam. The lower ones have lion brackets and the upper ones gaṇḍabhērūḍa brackets which are unique. Each bird is represented as having two lion faces each of which has crests and a curved beak. Each of the seven storeys of the brick tower is formed of multipilastered turrets of the Draviḍian style and each opening is defended by two dvārapālas. The tower is about 100 feet high and is surmounted by nine large gilded kalāṣas supported by crescents.

In front of the mahādvāra a large dvāramanṭapa or porch was built by Nīlagiri Muddaṇṇa about forty years ago. It is borne on eight

BANGALORE DISTRICT

BANGALORE FORT.

The North or Delhi Gate and a third of the original out-works are the only portions now remaining of the once extensive fort at Delhi gate. Bangalore. The fort is said to have originally consisted of a double rampart running in an oval shape. (Home's Select Views in Mysore, 1794). Out of the five strong gates which are said to have existed on the north side only three remain now: one in the outworks, the second in the west wall of the east bastion and the third, which is the Delhi Gate proper in the cross wall running east to west to the south of the east bastion.

All the three gates are high and arched. They are mostly built of brick and mortar, each with a portal to left and one with guard rooms on the inner side. Tipu is said to have entirely rebuilt the Delhi Gate. But on the outer southern jamb of the middle gate is sculptured a Hindu warrior in relief.

History and general description. (Pl. XX, 1). He is perhaps Kempe Gaṇḍa of Māgaḍi. He is represented in the act of attacking a tiger with his sword and short spear (?) This fort gate and the adjacent walls including at least the west wall of the outworks seem to have been originally Hindu in construction. Relief figures of the lion, the liṅga, matsya, Gaṇeśa, etc., appearing here and there on the inner fort wall as also on the western cross wall of the outworks support this view.

There are two semicircular bastions in the inner fort wall, of which the one on the east is larger than the other to its west. The former had originally a Hindu gateway with pendant bud capitals on its jambs. Tipu seems to have closed it up during his extensive renovations of the fort and constructed the Delhi Gate in a south cross wall which he seems to have constructed afresh along with another, that is perhaps the middle gate in the west wall of the bastion. The three chambers inside this east bastion were also probably put up by him. At the head of the western chamber there is a tablet mentioning that it was the dungeon in which Captain David Baird and others had been confined till their release in 1785. Home states that near the north or Delhi Gate, Tipu established a mint, a foundry for brass cannon, an arsenal for military stores, magazines for grain and gunpowder, etc. It is very likely that these chambers were guard rooms or magazines.

The Delhi gate, though mostly built of brick and mortar, is faced with stone on the northern side. The western wall of the east bastion containing the middle gateway seems to have been an improvement effected to the fort by Tipu. But the northern wall which contains a Gaṇeśa shrine and two arched side niches is definitely Hindu and must have stood before the days of Tipu.

To the west of the east bastion runs a cross wall of the out-works south to north with another running at right angles to it, west to east, and containing the first of the three gates from the north, which has been illustrated by Home in Plate VII of his Select Views in Mysore. This gate had guard rooms on the outside as well as on the inside. Those on the outside have been knocked down already, while those on the inside, now proposed to be dismantled owing to their great decay and ugliness, stand in the north-west corner of the quadrangle abutting the north wall of the outworks. There are three rooms with arched doorways of which the one on the east is smaller in size than the rest. The structure is of brick and mortar and was perhaps built by Tipu.

In the western crosswall there is now a chamber, which, during the Hindu period, seems to have been open and to have served as a gateway. Inside the chamber there are thick Dravidian pillars. At the head of the doorway is a relief figure of Gajalakshmī.

A third crosswall on the east connects the east bastion with the northern wall of the outworks. To the east of the east bastion there is a shrine of Hanumān which originally guarded the Hindu gateway.

The brick parapets above the fort walls were all evidently put up during the days of Tipu Sultan. They have musket holes and cannon platforms.

MANDYA DISTRICT.

Gangavadi.

Gaṅgavāḍi is a village about four miles to the east of Honakere in the Nāgaṃaṅgala taluk. It appears to date from the Hoysaḷa times as can be gathered from the innumerable vīragals of this period which are built into the platform of a perpul tree to the north-east of the Bīrēdēva temple at the place. Some of the vīragals have inscriptions but are so worn out that not much can be made out of them. According to the tradition current in the locality the place is said to have been ruled by a certain Gaṅgarāja and derived its name from him. It is not known to what dynasty he belonged, if at all it is true that a king of this name ruled the place. Nor is it possible for us, in the absence of a definite inscription, to identify him with the famous Hoysaḷa general who bore that name. There are, however, the remains of an ancient fort at the place; but these belong to the 17th century and only prove that the place was the seat of a Pālḷeyagār of the period.

On the way from Honakere to Gaṅgavāḍi and nearer the latter place than the former, there is a huge boulder called Sankankallu by the villagers. The front face of the boulder has the marks of an ancient quarry which the people have mistaken for an inscription. At the foot of the boulder is a small natural stone worshipped by the people as Gaviraṅga. To the east of the boulder flows the river Lōkapāvanī and renders the prospect of the surrounding country highly attractive.

Machalaghatta.

MALLĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

Māchalaghaṭṭa is a village about four miles directly to the south of Honakere. In an inscription (Ng. 106) the place is called Māchanaghaṭṭa and Bijjalēśvarapura. About a hundred yards to the north-east of the village there is the Mallēśvara temple (Pl. XV, 2) which is a good monument of the Hoysala period (circa 13th century A.D.).

The temple is a soapstone structure facing east. It consists of a square garbhagriha, a vestibule, a square navaraṅga and a porch (Pl. XVI, 1).

General description: The building seems to have been raised on a floating foundation. The basement consists of three square and uncarved cornices. The outer walls are relieved by right-angled pilasters. The eaves are a little sloping. The parapet above them is intact only on the south where it has, in the middle, an Umāmahēśvara group and stone kalāṣas at the corners. The tower which is a stepped pyramid consists of nine tiers with dentil mouldings at intervals projecting upwards. The finial of the tower is missing. In front of the tower is a stone projection over the vestibule.

The porch of the temple has two cylindrical pillars on either side in front. Its ceiling is formed like a dome and is circular with a lotus pendant in the centre.

The navaraṅga doorway is plain but for an eaves-shaped cornice above the uncarved lintel. On either side of the doorway are star-shaped pilasters. The navaraṅga hall is about 16' square. Against the walls on the interior are cruciform pilasters. The central ceiling is supported on four lathe-turned bell-shaped pillars. These central pillars are well-worked in their several mouldings and have the garland, rosette and medallion ornamentations on the shaft.

All the ceilings of the navaraṅga are well-designed domes and are differently shaped. Starting from the east and running clockwise they are as under:—

Navaraṅga ceilings.

1. Twelve-pointed star with lotus pendant in the centre.
2. Six-pointed star with lotus pendant.
3. An octagon with an octagonal pendant.
4. Square with arched corners and indentations at the sides. Lotus pendant.
5. Octagon with a square above it. In the centre is a Tāṇḍavēśvara group. Flat ceiling.
6. Three concentric squares with lotus pendant in the centre.
7. Two concentric eight-pointed stars with lotus pendant in the centre.
8. Octagon with a circle above and a lotus pendant in the centre.
9. Central—thirty-two pointed star with three concentric circles above.

In the centre hangs a beautiful lotus pendant. The corner stones on the beams have the figures of Dikpālas, etc.

In the central aṅkana of the navaraṅga is a beautiful potstone Nandi. Of the four turreted niches in the hall only two contain images. The images are : Gaṇēśa and Saptamātrikas.

Images in navaraṅga.

2. GIRJAKALYANAMURTI (p. 30).

3. KAMASAMHARAMURTI (p. 30).

4. LINGODDBHAVAMURTI (p. 31).

The vestibule doorway is well worked with jambs and perforated windows at the sides. Above the lintel is an eaves-shaped cornice.

Vestibule. The pediment contains the figure of Umāmahēśvara, while the upper lintel has a Tāṇḍavēśvara group flanked by tailed makaras. The ceiling of the navaraṅga rises on two sets of corner stones with a lotus pendant in the centre.

The garbhagriha doorway, like that of the vestibule, is also well worked. It is guarded on either side by dvārapālas. On the lower lintel is the figure of Gaḷalakshmī, while on the upper one is that of a four-handed goddess holding in her four hands the following attributes in order : abhaya, kalaśa, lotus and dāna. She is flanked on either side by lady attendants and long-tailed makaras. The ceiling of the garbhagriha is similar to that of the vestibule. The main līṅga is about 2½ feet high including the pedestal or pāṇipīṭha.

A little distance to the south-east of the temple was standing until recently a pillar which appears to have been about 8 feet high originally. It has been brought down. Its sixteen-sided shaft rises on a square base.

BHAIRAVA SHRINE.

About 150 yards to the north-west of the Mallēśvara temple is a ruined and plain structure dedicated to Bhairava. It faces south and contains in its main cell three images of Bhairava of which one is definitely Hoysala and is well carved.

In front of the temple is a śiḍitale-gallu which is exactly like the one exhibited in the Archaeological Office museum.

Bhaktarahalli.

MALLĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

The bēchirāk village of Bhaktarahalli lies about a mile to the north-west of the Mallēśvara temple of Māchalaghaṭṭa. It contains a granite

Situation and general description. temple dedicated to Mallēśvara. The structure faces east and its outside walls are plain except for the occurrence of right-angled pilasters around the garbhagriha and vestibule.

The original stepped-pyramidal tower above the garbhagriha is all but completely ruined now like the one at Māchalaghaṭṭa.

Inside the navaraṅga there are four pillars, the eight-sided and sixteen-sided mouldings of whose shafts are surmounted by wheel-shaped mouldings and square abacus. The central ceiling of the navaraṅga rises on two sets of corner stones with a lotus pendant in the centre, while the other ceilings of the hall are all flat. Among the rude stone images kept in the navaraṅga are : Bhairava, Sūrya, and Vīrabhadra which are all small in size, being about a foot in height. There is also a saptamātrika panel. The vestibule doorway has perforated screens on either side of the jambs. The liṅga inside the garbhagṛiha is low.

Somenahalli.

About a mile and half to the north-west of Honakere lies the village of Sōmenahalli. The monuments at the place are mostly of the 17th century A.D. There are the remains of a fort of this period whose walls have been built up of stone blocks of large size without mortar. Near a wide gateway of the fort are two temples: one of Sōmanahallammā, a popular goddess of the locality, and the other of Hanumān, the guardian deity of the fort gate. Both these structures are of the same period as the fort. But the temple of Kōṭemārammā on the inside of the gateway is a size stone structure built in more recent times.

About fifty yards to the west of the gateway is a Kārugallu whose date, however, seems to be more ancient than that of the monuments referred to above. The side slabs of this Kārugallu are huge like those at Beḷḷūr (M. A. R. 1939 p. 35) and measure about 7 feet high and 3 feet wide.

LAKSHMĪ-NARASIMHA TEMPLE.

A little distance to the west of the Kārugallu and near the west fort wall is the temple of Lakshminarasimha. (Pl. XV, 3). The structure is of granite and faces east. It consists of a square garbhagṛiha, a closed vestibule, a square navaraṅga and a front porch. Among the outside basement cornices are a rounded cornice and an eaves-shaped one, the latter having kīrtimukha ornamentation. The outer walls of the garbhagṛiha and the navaraṅga are relieved by right-angled pilasters having the biscuit and cushion-shaped mouldings above. There are also turreted niches in the north and south outer walls of the navaraṅga and the north, west and south walls of the garbhagṛiha. The turrets are boat-shaped with kīrtimukhas above. Above the walls the eaves have a sharp curve with kīrtimukha ornamentation at intervals. A row of sea-horses ornaments the eaves around the garbhagṛiha as at Rāghavāpura. The occurrence of this motif here suggests that the temple might belong to the same date as the Rāghavāpura temple, viz., the 14th century, though the crude main image here would point to some later period. The temple appears to have had no tower.

The front porch of the temple is raised on two cylindrical pillars of granite and is entered by two flights of steps on the south and north.

Porch and navaraṅga. The navaraṅga doorway is flanked by two right-angled pilasters. The jambs have the scroll and floral ornamentations which are carried over the lintel also. The four central pillars inside the navaraṅga are of granite, bell-shaped and shortish. Their bases are cubical; but their shafts have the cylindrical, vase and wheel-shaped mouldings, with garland ornamentation on the cylinder. The central ceiling is deep and formed by two sets of corner stones placed one on another. A low pendant hangs from the centre of the ceiling.

In the navaraṅga is lying a very rude granite image of Lakshmīnarasimha bearing the vaḍgalai caste mark on its forehead.

The vestibule doorway is plain. Inside the vestibule is another Lakshmīnarasimha group similar to the above and as crude. The image is set up on a Garuḍa pedestal.

Vestibule and garbhagriha.

The garbhagriha is empty. The original image seems to have been lost. Neither of the Lakshmīnarasimha images mentioned above can be the original image which once occupied the garbhagriha. These images are probably not earlier than the 17th century in date, while the temple, by reason of its similarity in style to the one at Rāghavāpura, can be ascribed to about the 14th century.

Kembanahalli.

In the hills beyond Kembanahalli and on the way to Bōgāvi were found the broken parts of a colossal soapstone image of a Jaina Tirthankara which must have been about 10' high when it was intact. The workmanship of the image is ascribable to about the 12th century A.D. The image is said to have been set up in a temple at the northern end of the hill.

Jaina vestiges.

Bogavi.

The village of Bōgāvi or Bōgādi is situated at a distance of about 9 miles to the north-east of Honakere. Its original name according to inscription No. 100, Nāgamangala Taluk, was Bhōgavati and the place seems to have been a prosperous Jaina centre with a Basti to the north-east.

Situation.

RUINED BASTI.

(Pl. XVII, 1).

The name of this Basti as given in inscription No. 100 Ng. is Śrīkarapa Jinālaya. The original structure (Pl. XVI, 2) which seems to have comprised of the garbhagriha, the open vestibule and the navaraṅga, the front porch possibly being added later, is said in the inscription to have been erected in 1145 A.D. by Heggade Mādāyya and endowed by Hoysanādēva.

History.

Of the original structure the garbhagriha and vestibule have been pulled down completely so that at present only the navaraṅga and the front porch of nine aṅkaṣas are existing. The material used for the building is entirely granite. The outer walls are raised on a basement consisting of four cornices which are all plain and square excepting only for the dentil mouldings which project upwards at intervals on the fourth cornice. The cornices on the west contain a long inscription of the 12th century A.D.

General description:
Outer view.

The front porch of nine aṅkaṣas is borne on 12 pillars which have cylindrical shafts rising from cubical bases. There are stone benches on the east and west sides of the porch. Though there appear to have been three entrances to the porch, all the flights of steps have disappeared now. The ceilings of the porch are all flat.

Porch.

The doorway of the navaraṅga is plain. The outer walls of the navaraṅga have collapsed. On the inside the pilasters are of the indented type. The four central pillars are of granite and bell-shaped. Only the central ceiling of the navaraṅga has a padma carving.

Navaranga.

To the south of the Basti a soapstone oil mill is lying.

VENKATACHALAPATI TEMPLE.

The temple of Venkaṭāchalapati lies about 50 yards to the south-west of the Basti and is inside the village. It is a modern structure and is architecturally unimportant.

Palagrahar.

About two miles to the north-east of the travellers' bungalow of Nāgamangala the village of Pālagrahār is situated. It contains three temples of which one was constructed about two years ago and the other two seem to hail from about the 17th century.

Of the older temples one is dedicated to Nāchchāramma and contains a metallic image of Nāchchāramma with a stone brindāvana. The other is a monocelled structure dedicated to Śvara, and contains besides the liṅga the images of Gaṇeśa, Bhairava and a bull. In the modern temple, that is the one built about two years ago, there is a good stone image of Satyanārāyaṇa holding gadā, chakra, śankha and padma. It is said that this image was sculptured at Bangalore. In its workmanship, generally, western influence can clearly be traced. The set of metallic images viz., of Rāma, Lakshmaṇa, Sitā and Hanumān, kept in the temple does not call for any special remark since all of them are modern.

Paduvalpatna.

At a distance of about seven miles to the west of Nāgamaṅgala the village of Paduvalpatna is situated in a valley of the hills. Excepting only for some of the viragals collected in front of the village entrance, there is no monument in the village, which can be considered as architecturally important. Of the viragals, several are small in size and unimportant. Among the larger viragals which are only three in number and set up in small shrines built for them is one with really good carving. It has three panels of figure sculpture. In the bottom panel the hero fights his enemies with his bow and arrow. He wears a loin cloth and dagger-bearing girdle. He is ornamented with eardrops, necklace, armlets, wristlets and anklets. His hair is combed and tied up into a large knot behind his head. In the next panel the hero is being conveyed in a vimāna to the Kailāsa of Śiva. The vimāna is borne on two pillars having cubical bases and octagonal shafts. In the top panel the hero worships the liṅga.

Among the temples of the village the oldest is a structure which is of the 17th century and contains in its main cell a Gaṇeśa, a liṅga and some small figures. Another temple which is also of the same period enshrines a stone brindāvana as at Pāl-agrahār. On the four facades of the brindāvana are carved the relief figures of Hanumān, a saint (perhaps Rāmānujāchārya), the vaḍagalai castemark and Gōpalakṛishṇa. The worship of such brindāvanas seems to be very popular in these parts, though it is more or less prevalent in other parts of the State also. The existence of such brindāvanas is due to Śrīvaiṣṇava influence. About 50 yards to the north-west of the brindāvana is a small Śiva temple containing a liṅga and a Nandi in its garbhagṛiha. The outer walls are faced with rubble stones, while the inner walls reveal workmanship of the 17th century. The ceiling of the garbhagṛiha is rather deep, rising on two sets of corner stones and having a low lotus in the centre.

Devalapura

Devalāpura is a hobli headquarter in the Nāgamaṅgala Taluk. It is situated at a distance of about nine miles to the east of Nāgamaṅgala.

Situation and Anti-quity.

The oldest inscription at the place is Nāgamaṅgala 80 (Epi. Car. IV) which belongs to the time of Ballāla III (c. 1300 A.D.). This inscription which is set up in the tank area of the village is unfortunately so worn out that much of it is illegible. Since, however, it is found in the tank area a possibility suggests itself that the tank might have been constructed in the days of Ballāla III.

LAKSHMĪ-NĀRĀYAṆA TEMPLE.

It is possible that the Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa temple at the place is also of the same period as the inscription. (Pl. XVII, 3). At any rate its similarity in the style of its construction to the temple at Sōmenahalli suggests this view, so far as the garbhagriha, the vestibule and navaraṅga are concerned. Being built entirely of granite, the temple seems to belong to three different periods structurally. The garbhagriha, the vestibule and the navaraṅga which form the original structure were perhaps constructed early in the 14th century. The similarity of the front porch to the one at the Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa temple at Rāghavāpura in the Gundlupet taluk of the Mysore District, suggests that it is also possibly of the same period or perhaps slightly later in date. But the front gateway and the pillar are definitely said in Nāgamaṅgala 79 to have been put up in 1472 A.D. by Chikka Allappa Nāyaka, son of Lakkaṇṇa Nāyaka, while receiving the village of Dēvalāpura from the Vijayanagar King Sāluva Narasiṅga. The tower, however, which is of brick and mortar appears to be a work of about the 17th century.

The temple is built on a floating foundation. The outer walls of the original structure are raised on four basement cornices of which the second from the bottom is octagonal. The walls are relieved by right-angled pilasters as at Sōmenahalli and have niches on the south and north of the navaraṅga and the vestibule, and on the south, west and north of the garbhagriha. These niches bear boat-shaped turrets rising on an eaves-shaped cornice which is ornamented with kīrtimukhas. The turrets are surmounted by kalaśas. The eaves which run all round the temple are straight-sided and have dentil projections upwards. The parapet, like the tower, is built of brick and mortar.

The front porch of the temple, as already stated, is designed and constructed like the one at Rāghavāpura. It is supported on four pillars each of which has a cubical base and an eight-sided and twenty-four fluted shaft surmounted by a wheel moulding and a square abacus. The porch is entered by three flights of steps on the east, south and north. The ceilings of the three aṅkaṇas of the porch are all flat except only the central one which has a padma carving in its centre.

The two pilasters on either side of the navaraṅga doorway have cubical bases, eight-sided shafts and plantain bud capitals. The doorway is plain with no dvārapālas. The hall is about 25 feet square. The four corner ceilings as also the one of the central square are a little deep, rising on two sets of corner stones with a low padma pendant in the centre. The central ceiling is borne on four pillars whose eight-sided shafts rise on cubical bases and are surmounted by wheel mouldings and square abaci. Against the south wall of the navaraṅga is a small rude figure of Gaṇeśa which appears to have been brought from elsewhere.

The vestibule doorway is also plain. The ceiling of the vestibule is flat with a padma carving in the centre. The size of the vestibule is about 8 feet square. The garbhagriha doorway is also plain. But its ceiling is ornamented like the one of the navaraṅga.

Vestibule and garbhagriha.

Inside the garbhagriha is seated the main god Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa with the goddess Lakshmī on his left lap. He holds in his four hands the following attributes: śankha, padma, gadā and chakra (Pl. XXI, 1). The goddess who is seated turning towards the main god holds padma in her hands. On the prabhāvaḷi appear in the convolutions of the scroll ornamentation the ten avatāras of Viṣṇu. The group is well carved and is unmistakably Hoysaḷa in workmanship. The main image is about 8 feet high including the pedestal. In the inscriptions the god is called Lakshmī-kānta. There is a stone kalaśa in front of the god.

Immediately to the north of the main temple of Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa, there is a smaller temple dedicated to Lakshminarasimha which, having in recent years become dilapidated, has been completely rebuilt. Originally it seems to have contained only a garbhagriha and two vestibules, portions of which now remain though renovated greatly by brick and mortar work. A front hall has also been added in brick and mortar. The brick vimāna, too, is a recent construction. The outer walls of the original garbhagriha and vestibules have been raised on a basement consisting of three cornices of which the middle one is octagonal. The walls are relieved by right-angled pilasters.

Lakshminarasimha shrine.

As already stated, the gateway and the lamp pillar in front of the temple are the contribution by Lakkappa Nāyaka in 1472 A.D. But neither of them does credit to the art of the period.

KŌDI-TIRUMALADĒVA TEMPLE.

At the north end of the tank of the village, there is a small hillock on which is built the Kōdi-Tirumaladēva temple. It faces south and contains a garbhagriha, a vestibule, a navaraṅga and a front porch. The outer walls which are plain are raised on a basement consisting of two cornices as at the Are-

Timmappa temple near Bhīmanahalli. The tower above the garbhagriha is of brick and mortar. The four pillars of the porch have square bases and sixteen-fluted shafts. All the doorways of the temple are plain. The pillars of the navaraṅga are similar to those of the porch. The central ceiling of the navaraṅga is a little deep and raised on two sets of corner stones. The ceiling of the garbhagriha is also similarly shaped.

Inside the garbhagriha the god Kōḍi-Timmappa stands on a rude padma pedestal. He is 2 feet high and is supported on either side by consorts. He holds in his four hands: abhaya, chakra, śankha and dāna.

Main image.

The temple is architecturally unimportant and belongs to about the 17th century. On the west wall of the navaraṅga, there is a single line Kannaḍa inscription reading: Chika Thimmayya-naṅkaṇa. The characters are of the 17th century. The pillar in front of the temple has fallen down and is broken. The temple, too, is dilapidated.

Kasalagere.

About a mile to the south of Dēvalāpura is situated the small village of Kasalagere. A little distance to the south-east of the place, on the northern side of a tank, is a ruined temple of Kallēśvara.

This temple is a low roofed structure consisting of a garbhagriha enshrining a līṅga (about 2 feet high), a closed vestibule with a plain doorway and a navaraṅga in whose central aṅkaṇa are four granite pillars having cubical bases and shafts containing eight-sided, sixteen-fluted, octagonal and cylindrical mouldings.

In the navaraṅga are placed a mutilated and dwarfish potstone image of Sūrya, a potstone Nandi (bull) showing some good workmanship and a nāga stone. In the north-west corner is set up the inscription of Ballāḷa II (1190 A.D.). The navaraṅga doorway is low and plain.

The outside walls, the eaves and parapet of the temple have all disappeared. The structure has no architectural importance excepting only its antiquity.

Outside the temple are three inscriptions of which two are engraved on vīraḡals. One of the latter mentions a basti of the time of Viṣṇuvardhana. It is said that at some distance to the east of the Kallēśvara temple there stood a basti which has now disappeared.

which is built a temple for the god Śrīnivāsa, otherwise called Are-Timmappa. Are means a baṇḍe or rock and since the god is consecrated on the rock, he is called Are-Timmappa.

The temple faces south and is entered by a low gateway in front of which there is a pillar. Structurally the temple belongs to two periods. The earlier building consists of a garbhagriha, a closed vestibule and a navaraṅga. Each of the four central pillars of the last portion has a cubical base and an eight-sided and sixteen-fluted shaft surmounted by a wheel moulding and a square abacus. These pillars are like those at the front porch of the Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa temple at Dēvalāpura. The central ceiling of the navaraṅga is raised on two sets of corner stones. The outer walls are plain, those of the garbhagriha and vestibule being raised on a basement of two rude plain cornices. This portion of the building seems to belong to the 16th century.

To this original structure have been added a mukhamanṭapa and a pātālāṅkaṇa which appear to be the contribution of the Pāllegār period. The pillars of the mukhamanṭapa have, on their cubical mouldings, relieve figures of dancing damsels, a monkey, Ugra-Narasimha, Venkaṭeśa, lion, Kāliya, peacock, Hanumān, Gaṇeśa, Garuḍa, Vēṅgōpāla, etc.

The god Śrīnivāsa in the garbhagriha stands on a plain pedestal. He is about 3½ feet high and holds in his four hands abhaya with padma, chakra, śaṅkha and gadā. These attributes are of Janārdana, while Śrīnivāsa ought to have had his left lower hand on kaṭi. The workmanship of the image is also poor. Similarly the image of the goddess which is enshrined in a rude cell to the west of the main temple is poor and may be ascribed to the 16th or even the 17th century.

The temple is a popular institution in the locality and belongs to Bhīmanahallī which is situated about a mile towards the south.

Bhīmanahallī Village.

SŌMĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

The Sōmēśvara temple in Bhīmanahallī is a low-roofed structure of granite erected in 1229 A.D. by the three sons of a certain Kom-

History and descrip- meyar and hence called in the inscription (Ng. 98) as tion. Kommēśvara.

The structure consists of a plain garbhagriha having in the middle of its inside west wall a plain eaves-shaped cornice. The doorway of the closed vestibule is plain. Each of the four central pillars of the navaraṅga has an eight-sided shaft rising on a cubical base. The central ceiling of the hall and those to its east and west are raised on two sets of corner stones.

The vestibule ceiling is designed like the navaraṅga central ceiling; but its central lotus is inset in a padma. The garbhagriha ceiling is like that of the vestibule.

Inside the navaraṅga are found the following sculptures : a well-worked granite Nandi, a mutilated but graceful granite Bhairava and another fragmentary Bhairava.

In the north-east corner of the navaraṅga is set up the inscription Ng. 98 which is a composition of the poet Mallikārjuna, the author of Sūktisudhārṇava (see M.A.R. 1931) and the inscription at Basrāl which is a village only about 5 miles from here.

The outer walls of the temple have in modern times been faced with rubble and bricks in mortar. In front of the temple and facing it is a soapstone Nandi seated in the usual attitude. To the south-east of the temple are several potstone vīragals which indicate that the place was of some importance during the 13th century. Beside the vīragals are a stone lamp pillar and a potstone śiḍitalegallu as at Māchalaghaṭṭa. In front of the vīragals is a granite pillar about 20 feet high on a platform of rubbles. To the north-east of the temple are the remains of another ancient temple of which only the navaraṅga exists with its four cylindrical pillars of granite. To the south of the Sōmēśvara temple is a 17th century granite structure enshrining a soapstone image of Bhairava, about 4 feet high including its pedestal and tōraṇa. To further south is a rude structure of rubbles enshrining in its main cell a bull on a pillar (Kambada-Basava). Another unimportant structure to its south contains the image of Hanumān.

Yeladahalli.

BASTI.

About a mile to the south-west of Nelligere in Nāgamangala Taluk lies the village of Chōlasandra. A little distance to the north of the place stands on a rock a ruined Basti which is in the area of the bechirāk village of Yeladahalli.

Situation.

The basti is a trikūṭāchala. (Pl. XVIII.) In front of it lies a large potstone slab with the inscription Ng. 76 (1145 A.D.) mentioning a grant to the temple by Narasimha I, the Hoysala king. The original part of the temple appears to have been only the main cell with its granite basement and potstone walls standing with right-angled pilasters bearing bell- and pillow-shaped mouldings. (Pl. XVII, 2).

At a slightly later date, the east and west cells appear to have been added with their potstone basements and pilastered walls bearing corniced and towered shallow canopies. There appear to have been towers above all the three cells. These have now disappeared. The east and west cells have lion-headed sōmasūtras, while the north cell has no sōmasūtra. The eaves are straight-sided with dentil projections upwards. In addition to the right-angled pilasters on the outer walls of these cells there are also cruciform pilasters. One of the cornices has dentil mouldings.

A small porch appears to have stood in front of the temple (Pl. XVII, 4) leading to the navaraṅga of four pillars with a ceiling bearing a fine large relievo padma. The porch, the navaraṅga pillars and ceilings have all been removed elsewhere along with the images of the temple. All the three vestibules of the temple are open. The ceilings of the vestibules are all of the same pattern and raised on two sets of corner stones.

The east and west cells have jambs with cruciform ornamental pilasters, lintel cornices and seated Jina lintels. The doorway of the main cell is plain except for the floral ornamentation on the jambs.

Dodjetka.

Dodjetka or Jettiga of the inscriptions (Ng. 12 and 15) is situated at a distance of about four miles to the south-east of Nelligere Travellers Bungalow. It has two temples dedicated to Kēśava and Hēmēśvara respectively. The latter has five inscriptions—Ng. 12—15 and a newly discovered one to the east of the navaraṅga doorway.

HĒMĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

The Hēmēśvara temple has a small garbhagriha with a liṅga, an open vestibule with a small Nandi and a small navaraṅga with four potstone pillars of the cylindrical type and a flat padma ceiling on two sets of corner stones each of which has a rosette on its lower surface. The navaraṅga doorway faces south as in several Hoysaḷa agrahāra villages.

The outer wall of the temple is also of potstone and is ornamented with right-angled pilasters with no other important feature. An inscription on a beam in the navaraṅga states that the temple was constructed in 1179 A.D. by Dummeya Nāyaka, a Hoysaḷa Officer (Mahāsāmanta).

KĒŚAVA TEMPLE.

The Kēśava temple is situated in the centre of the village. It is a late Vijayanagar structure of granite, largish in size but poor in art. Inside the garbhagriha there is a small Kēśava image (2½ feet high) on a Garuḍa pedestal. The pedestal and the image both appear to be poor Vijayanagar period imitations of old Hoysaḷa work.

The temple has a garbhagriha, a closed vestibule and a navaraṅga with four octagonal pillars, each having cubical mouldings, which are well dressed but without ornamentation. There are a mukhamanṭapa and a pātālāṅkaṇa of six tall octagonal pillars in front.

The temple is unimportant from the architectural point of view.

overgrown with bushes, etc., and stands amidst rice fields. In its garbhagriha are two potstone images, of which one is a two-handed Virabhadra. In the ruined navaraṅga are some mutilated images of potstone of which one is Viṣṇu. An image of Mahishāsuramardini with a Hoysala inscription (Pl. XXI, 2) lies to the south of the tank bund by the side of a Garuḍa pedestal. This image undoubtedly belonged to the temple and is a good piece worthy of being preserved in a museum.

GŌPĀLAKRISHṆA TEMPLE.

The temple of Gōpālakṛiṣṇa in the village is built of granite and seems to belong to about the 15th century. To the south of the Older temple in the area. temple is an older structure of soapstone of the Hoysala period in whose garbhagriha there is a Garuḍa pedestal.

The image itself is missing. It seems that when the image was lost and the temple became dilapidated the later temple of granite was constructed and a fresh Vēṇugōpāla was consecrated during the 15th century. The earlier temple has its outer soapstone walls ornamented with right-angled pilasters. The ceiling of the navaraṅga has now fallen; originally it had a fine padma carving, even finer than that at Yelādahalli.

The later granite structure consists of a garbhagriha, two closed vestibules of which the outer one has two side cells as at the Tapasirāya

Later structure. temple at Dēvarahalli, a navaraṅga and a front porch.

The outer walls are plain and have sharp eaves. The front porch is borne on four pillars each of which has a cubical base with hooded projections at the upper corners and a shaft with the sixteen-sided, vase and wheel mouldings and with floral and garland designs.

The navaraṅga doorway has on its lintel the image of baby Kṛiṣṇa on fours. The pillars inside the navaraṅga are like those in the porch; but on the cubical base of these pillars appear the relieve figures of Kāliya, lion, Gaṇēśa, Bālakṛiṣṇa, Garuḍa, peacock, kalaśa, parrots and Sarasvatī. The last is a four-handed image holding rosary, padma, padma and book. The central ceiling of the navaraṅga is deep and raised on two sets of corner stones with a lotus pendant inset in a padma. In the navaraṅga are kept the images of Gaṇēśa and Mahishāsuramardini both of which show good workmanship, though the material used is granite. The image of Mahishāsuramardini stands under a tamāla tōraṇa. She is eight-handed and spearing the mahisha which is well carved. The workmanship shows that the carving has been in imitation of Hoysala specimens; but the face of the goddess is a little ugly showing wide bulging out eyes, broad nose, chubby cheeks and protruding lips.

The outer vestibule doorway is guarded by Vaiṣṇava dvārapālas. Inside the garbhagriha stands on a Garuḍa pedestal the image of Gōpālakṛiṣṇa (about 6 feet high including the pedestal), rather poorly worked though in imitation of Hoysaḷa sculptures. Above the head is a five-hooded Ādi-Śeṣha. The image is definitely of the Vijayanagar period. The ceiling of the garbhagriha is raised on two sets of corner stones.

Dadaga.

Dadaga or Daḍiganakere of the inscriptions is a small village about four miles to the west of Nelligere. It appears to have been an agrahāra in the Hoysaḷa days. It has two Hoysaḷa temples dedicated to Chennakēśava and Śōmēśvara, both of which now stand to the north of the present village.

CHENNAKĒŚAVA TEMPLE.

The Chennakēśava temple appears to have been constructed in three stages.

The original Hoysaḷa temple is a plainish potstone structure with a square garbhagriha containing an image of Chennakēśava about 5 feet high. The main image is also comparatively without the elaborate ornamentation of the usual Hoysaḷa work and with a conical kirita indicative of the 14th century.

History and general description. (Pl XIX,3). But the tōraṇa is of the same stone as the image and bears the ten avatāras after the usual Hoysaḷa fashion with the fish, etc., in the animal form and the seated Buddha holding śankha and chakra. The Garuḍa pedestal is also of Hoysaḷa workmanship. All these suggest the date c. 1300 A.D., while the name Śōmēśvara of the Śiva temple suggests fifty years earlier.

The brick tower or the vimāna which is much ruined is of the Vijayanagar period as seen by the squarish bricks, etc. The ceiling of the vestibule has a fine padma design in relieve inset inside a square. The images of Nammālvār and Rāmānuja are of course of the Vijayanagar period.

In front of the vestibule extends a ruined navaraṅga having eight cylindrical, chiselled pillars of potstone, the navaraṅga being five aṅkaṇas long and three broad. The inscriptions on the easternmost doorway aṅkaṇa beam prove that the temple was extended in C. 1400 A.D. in the days of Harihara. But the navaraṅga is completely of potstone including its doorway, while the old mukhamanṭapa of three aṅkaṇas with its chiselled neckless cylindrical granite pillars and shallow padma inset into a Śrīchakra in the central aṅkaṇa show imitation of Hoysaḷa work.

The large pillared pātālāṅkaṇa with its northern manṭapa and a now disappeared kaisāle verandah around the temple are granite structures probably of the Vijayanagar times. The three central ceilings of the navaraṅga have been raised each on two sets of corner stones with padma pendants in the middle.

There is nothing much interesting in the temple architecturally except the main image.

SÔMĒŚVARA TEMPLE.

The temple of Sômeśvara is built of granite and now in ruins. In its garbhagriha is a potstone liṅga of the Hoysaḷa period. In the maṇṭapa in front are a broken Nandi and a granite Bhairava image. The temple is architecturally unimportant.

VĪRABHADRA TEMPLE.

The Virabhadra temple also is unimportant. It is a structure of the Pāllegār days with a rude stone image of Virabhadra in the garbhagriha. In the vestibule are a bull and Gaṇeśa. In the navaraṅga there are two images of which one is Hayagrīva.

YŌGĀ-NARASIMHA TEMPLE.

At the south end of the village is a modern brick structure covering an old temple of Yōgā-Narasimha. The four pillars of the navaraṅga appear to belong to the 11th century A.D. The pillars (Pl. XXI, 2) which are small contain the rudimentary bell, vase and wheel shapes similar to those in Noṇavinakere and the Rāmēśvara temple in Narasamaṅgala. The front porch of the temple is borne on neatly chiselled octagonal pillars as at the Chōlēśvara temple in Noṇavinakere. At the south-east corner of the temple on the outside can be seen the original basement stone cornices of which one has the kīrtimukha mouldings. On the central ceiling in the navaraṅga a padma is carved in relief.

The temple appears to belong to the Chōḷa period—C. 1020 A.D. The name Daḍiga suggests the Gaṅga king of that name; but nothing has yet been found definitely of that period in the village except the tank which bears the name Daḍigana kere.

The main image of Yōgā-Narasimha (Pl. XIX, 4) which is much coated with ancient wax needs to be cleaned. It is a good piece of sculpture reminding us of the Narasimha image at Agara in the Yelandūr taluk. The god sits in yōgāsana with his knees tied up in a yōgapatṭa or band, his fore-hands resting on the knees while the hindhands hold the chakra and śankha by two fingers. The face and mane are well worked, the former having a peaceful look. The conical kirita with its band of beaded hangings at the top reminds us of Chōḷa workmanship.

ŚĀNTINĀTHA BASTI.

In the Śāntinātha basti the image is fine and about 2½ feet high with a well worked tōraṇa behind. It is said that it was brought from the Heggaddevankote taluk. The basti is however a recent structure.

Kodihalli.

DADIGEŚVARA TEMPLE.

About 2½ miles to the south of Daḍaga and on the side of the waste weir of the tank called Daḍiganakere is situated the temple of Daḍigēśvara which belongs to the village of Kōḍihalli. Though the outside walls are of brick and mortar suggesting their modern construction, the pillars of the navaraṅga which have cubical and eight-sided mouldings look very much like the specimens of the 11th century. It is very probable that this temple is of the same date as the Yōga-Narasimha temple at Daḍaga; but it appears still more likely that this temple, if not also that of Yōga-Narasimha at Daḍaga, belongs to the period of the tank which, like this temple, bears the name of Daḍiga, the Gaṅga king. Thus there is room to think that the tank and the temples of Yōga-Narasimha and Daḍigēśvara on either side of the tank are of the Gaṅga period, though the fact cannot as yet be established.

The Daḍigēśvara temple consists of a garbhagṛiha, an open vestibule and a navaraṅga. The garbhagṛiha ceiling only has a padma carving. The līṅga inside the garbhagṛiha is large and very probably Gaṅga in type. It recalls to mind the old līṅgas at Nandi and Narasamaṅgala.

In the navaraṅga are kept the following images: Nandi, Sūrya, Nāga stones and Gaṇeśa. The Sūrya image has a horse-shoe tōraṇa on which there is creeper ornamentation.

Hallada Hosalli.

On the way to Kelagere from Kōḍihalli at a distance of about a mile and half from the latter place is the tiny village of Hallada-Hosalli which contains several vīragals of about the 14th and 15th centuries. Among these memorial stones was found a peculiar Sati stone having three friezes of sculptures, each frieze containing three panels. The description of the friezes and their panels is as follows:

Bottom Frieze:

1. A plantain tree.
2. A figure with uplifted sword.
3. A lady with something in her right hand—lemon (?).

1. KEMPEGAUDA OF MAGADI (?), FORT, BANGALORE (p. 38).

2. BRONZE TRIPOD, CHENNAKESAVA TEMPLE, DELUR (p. 61)

3. BRONZE TRIPOD, CHENNAKESAVA TEMPLE, DELUR (p. 61).

4. BRONZE TRIPOD, CHENNAKESAVA TEMPLE, DELUR (p. 61).

Middle Frieze :

1. Attendant lady.
2. Seated lady—Sati.
3. Attendant lady.

Top Frieze :

1. Nandi on pīṭha.
2. Liṅga.
3. Lady with lotus and kalaśa—Sati.

Above the liṅga is a kīrtimukha flanked by the Sun and Crescent. Between the kīrtimukha and the crescent is a three-line Kannaḍa inscription which appears to belong to the 14th century.

Kelagere.

Kelagere seems to have been a place of considerable importance and antiquity.

Ancient Jaina place. The old name of the place was Kellaṅgere. During the 12th century there appears to have been a prosperous Jaina settlement here.

To the east of the village is a lofty pillar called 'Garuḍagamba' by the villagers.

Lofty Garuda pillar. It is an important Jaina monument mentioning several Jaina monks. It is about 20 feet high and stands on a platform of rubble stones. It has a square base and a shaft having the eight-sided, cylindrical, vase and wheel mouldings. The top of the pillar consisting of the capital, the abacus and the elephant on it has been brought down. This portion of the pillar is now kept apart. The elephant is a ridden one like those met with at Agrabhāra Bāchalli and explains why this pillar, like them, is also called Garuḍagamba by the villagers. On three of the four faces of the base of the pillar is engraved a large Jaina inscription.

MALLIKĀRJUNA TEMPLE.

Across the tank of the village stands the temple of Mallikārjuna which appears to be a structure of the 14th century. The building is

History and description. dilapidated. A certain Varadaiya Nāyaka is mentioned in an inscription on the lintel of the navaraṅga doorway to have built the temple during the time of Harihara.

The temple consists of a garbhagṛīha, a vestibule and a navaraṅga. Each of these has a deep ceiling raised on two sets of corner stones. There is a pendant inset in a padma in each of the ceilings. The four pillars of the navaraṅga are well chiselled with the bases square and the shafts having the eight-sided, sixteen-fluted, vase and wheel-shaped mouldings. The abaci are square and have dentil mouldings downwards at the corners. The navaraṅga doorway has on the lintel a liṅga with a Nandi on either side.

The temple has lost all its original sculptures and the liṅga. In the navaraṅga is lying another inscription of Varadappa.

SHIMOGA DISTRICT

Hodigere.

SHAJI'S TOMB.

(PL. XXI, 3 AND 4).

It is well known that when Shāji, the father of Sivaji, led the armies of Bijapur into the Kannada and Tamil countries and annexed Bangalore, Kolar, Jinji, Tanjore and other places, the Adil Shah of Bijapur conferred upon him these southern territories with the title of "Rāja." Thus Shāji became a rāja of the Karnāṭak territories. Shāji's kingdom was subordinate to the Adil Shah and consisted of tracts extending from the Shimoga District in the south-easterly direction towards Tanjore. This kingdom was later on inherited by Shāji's younger son Ekoji, the elder son Sivaji having carved out a kingdom for himself near Poona.

Shaji's kingdom.

Shaji's death.

Rāja Shāji appears to have engaged himself in his last years in consolidating these territories and perhaps rounding them off. It was during this period that an accident brought about his death. The event is thus narrated in Grant Duff's History of the Mahrattas. (Vol. I, 1912, p. 160).

"On Sivajee's return he heard of the death of his father, which happened by an accidental fall from his horse, when hunting, in January 1664, at the village of Buswuputtum, on the banks of the Toongbuddra, near Bednore, where he had joined the Beejapoor army to assist in reducing some refractory zumeendars." This account has been repeated in Prof. Balakrishna's account of Shāji's death in 'Sivaji, the Great,' Vol. I. and by other writers. It is found to be incorrect in some respects since the Brindāvan and the epitaph of Rāja Shāji have been found now. A great deal of historical material has now been made available in Marathi and we find the correction corroborated fully.

In the course of a tour in the Chennagiri Taluk of the Shimoga District of the Mysore State, it was discovered that the place of Shāji's death was really Hodigere, 6 miles to the east of Chennagiri, 12 miles to the west of the Holalkere railway station and a mile to the north of the Bhadravati-Chitaldrug road. It is 25 miles from

1. LAKSHMI NARAYANA, LAKSHMI NARAYANA TEMPLE, DEVALAPURA (p. 47).

2. NAVARANGA PILLAR, YOGANARASIMHA TEMPLE, DADAGA (p. 55).

3. SHAJI'S TOMB (AS IT WAS), HODIGERE (p. 58).

4. SHAJI'S TOMB (AS IT IS), HODIGERE (p. 58).

Basavāpaṭṇa. Shāji's Brindāvan or tomb was also found along with indisputable epigraphic evidence of its identity in the shape of an inscription in the Kannaḍa language and Kannaḍa characters worded thus:—

First line	....	Śrī Shāji
Second line	....	Rājana sa .....

After 'sa' the stone is broken. The original word was evidently 'samādhi' as on Rāhut Rāmappa's epitaph which is close by. This stone was shown by the local Kazi, Mr. Burhanuddin, and was also seen by the local Amildar.

Hodigere is now a small village containing a few antiquities like the Bhavāni temple, the Rachiram well, etc., belonging to about the 17th century. The sowcar of the place, Mr. L. Mallappa Setty, has with him certain old costumes of the Maratha period. To the north-west of the village, is a tank to the north of whose bund stands an old banyan tree by the side of the cart-track leading to Yergāṭṇahalli. The field just to its north appears to have been an old burning ghat and it has yielded at least two epitaphs. One of these reads 'Rāhuta Rāmappana Samādhi' and is evidently that of Rāmappa, a cavalry officer.

An enclosed portion of the field now used as a kana for stacking hay by the local Nāḍiga, Mr. Subbanna, is pointed out as the "Lāyada Hola" or the stable's field—perhaps Shāji's stables. In the middle of the field is a low platform of brick and mortar about 9'×8'×1'. A tapering stone pillar stands near the head with a lamp niche carved near its top. A little to its east is said to have stood a stone slab with an inscription. This slab was removed from the place about forty years ago and used as a covering slab for the waste weir of the tank. After considerable search, the slab was discovered by the local Kazi, Mr. Burhanuddin. It was found to contain the inscription mentioned above in Kannaḍa meaning "This is the tomb of Shāji Rāja".

The villagers state that Mr. Nāḍiga Ganganna who was then living had a Kannada Bakhar with him in which the local history, Shāji's death, etc. were all described. The book was taken away about thirty years ago by some Co-operative Inspector and was not returned. It is said that while Shāji was camping at Hodigere, wild beasts gave much trouble in the neighbourhood. The rāja, who was about sixty years old, went out on horse back to hunt these creatures. In the course of the hunt his horse's leg was caught in a hole in the ground and both the horse and the rider fell. Shāji became unconscious and died.

The local people mention that about 30 years ago, a scholar by name Mr. Patawardhan of Poona visited the place and collected the available information. In reply to an enquiry from the Mysore Archæological Office, Prof. Dutto Vaman Potdar, Secretary, Bhārat Itihāsa Samśōdhaka Maṇḍal, Poona, kindly referred to a Marathi paper of the late Mr. Panduranga Narasimha Patawardhan of Poona published in the annual report of the Maṇḍal for 1915-16. The paper confirms the information noted above and states that according to the land records of Hodigere, the samādhi was being worshipped till 1733 A.D. Originally the village of Yergātanhaḷli was assigned for this worship. Mr. Patawardhan was led to the discovery by the narrative of Shāji's death given in Jedhe's Marathi chronicle.

As mentioned by Jedhe, the date of Shāji's death was Saturday, the 6th of Māgha śuddha of the year Śubhakṛit corresponding to the śaka year 1585. This corresponds to the English date 23rd January 1664.

Shāji's funeral was conducted by Ekoji to whom the Adil Shah gave his father's mansab. Sivaji heard the news soon after the sack of Surat and at the place of his father's death got a pavilion or chatri put up. Adil Shah gave a sannad granting Yergātanhaḷli for maintaining worship at the pavilion. The latter appears to have been more a memorial brindāvan erected over the ashes of Shāji. Sardesai has referred to this event in his 'Marathi Riyasat,' page 82.

Durgadahalli.

KĀLABHAIRAVA TEMPLE.

The temple of Kālabhairava is situated at a distance of about two miles from the village Durgadahalli. A road runs from Durgadahalli to the Horikan Estate and from this road a footpath leads to the temple. The temple is situated in the midst of a jungle with no habitations nearby. A road leading from Uppinaṅgaḍi in South Canara District to Kaḷasa, called Kaḍadakallughāṭ road, once used largely for traffic, runs near the temple. The road is now only a foot-path used by a few pedestrians from Uppinaṅgaḍi side. The travellers by this ghat road once worshipped in the temple but there are not many devotees now.

Situation.

The temple is built of rough stone slabs and consists of a garbhagriha with a vimāna, a vestibule, a navaraṅga and a mukhamanṭapa.

General description. The vimāna above the garbhagriha is shaped like a stepped pyramid with the figure of a kīrtimukha. The area of the garbhagriha and the vestibule is roughly 20' × 12'; the navaraṅga is about 20 feet square and the mukhamanṭapa 10 feet square.

CEILING IN NAVARANGA, BUCHESVARA TEMPLE, KORAVANGALA.

The garbhagriha has a lotus carved in the ceiling. It enshrines the image of Bhairava which is about 4 feet high above the pedestal. It has a peaceful appearance and holds in the four hands the usual sword, drum, trident and kapāla. The vestibule is plain and contains two stone images of Gaṇapati or Byātarāya and Pārvatī-Paramēśvara all of which are rudely carved. The navaraṅga has the usual bhuvanēśvari supported on four stone pillars. There is a lotus bud in the centre of the ceiling. The pillars are roundish and not well-carved and seem to belong to the Vijayanagar times. The rough sculptures on them include Gōpālakrishṇa, nāgabandha, purushāmṛiga, etc.

No inscriptions are found in the temple; nor is there any reference to it available in the published records so far. Local tradition ascribes the consecration of the image to Paraśurāma, and the construction of the temple to Jakkaṇāchāri, while the daughter of a Ballālarāya is said to have endowed the temple with 9 varahas from the interest of which 9 khaṇḍugas of paddy were to be used for the amṛitapaḍi of the temple.

high, which is an offering of Kumāra Lakshmīdhara Daṇḍanāyaka, a Hoysala Officer. It is one of the very few metal objects known definitely to belong to the Hoysala period and illustrates that the art of metal work during the period was as much advanced as stone work and that it closely followed the same traditions. (Pl. XX, 2, 3 and 4). Each of the three legs of the tripod consists of three groups of figures arranged in an ascending order thus :—

1. The bottom, that is the foot proper, has three metallic bells in between which are two human figures—one male and another female—in dancing attitudes similar to those in the stone bracket figures under the eaves of the main temple. In between the figures again and also linking them up above extends, all round the tripod, a fine creeper scroll.

2. Next is worked a pedestal on which stands a dancing male or female flanked on either side by dancing drummers.

3. From behind the figure on the pedestal runs on either side a symmetrical combination of floral, bird and animal ornamentation: from the beak of a swan issues forth a creeper above which is a long-tailed lion surmounted by more floral ornamentation. The creepers form floriated arches by meeting between the legs of the tripod and terminating in a beautiful lotus bud in the middle of the arch.

4. Between the creepers and the upper circular band, is a panel of ornamental swans inset in an outer panel of Gaṇḍabhērūṇḍa figures.

5. The upper circular band itself has below it a row of hanging lotuses which are smaller than the pendants in the middle of the arches formed by floriated creepers as mentioned above.

6. On the flat surface of the circular band is the inscription, in Kannaḍa characters, of Kumāra Lakshmīdhara Daṇḍanāyaka.*

PART IV—EXCAVATION.

CHITALDRUG DISTRICT

THE BRAHMAGIRI SITE.

A Survey before Excavation.

The decipherment of Brāhmi inscriptions by Prinsep and their collection by Cunningham led to the discovery, among other things, of Asoka's edicts in Mysore. the life-history of Aśoka Maurya and his greatness as a man and a ruler. But his empire was believed to extend only to the Narmada-Mahānadi line. In 1892 came the stirring discovery by Mr. B. L. Rice of three copies of Aśoka's minor rock edict No. 1 in the northernmost extremity of the Mysore State, abutting into the Bellary District. It is learnt that on the last day of the tour in the summer of 1892, some shepherd boys led the Mysore Archæological Office party to a large boulder known as 'Aksharada-guṇḍu' near the north end of the Brahmagiri hill in the Molakālmuru Taluk. When Mr. Rice read the inscription on it, he discovered that it was a command issued by the Emperor Aśoka to his own subjects. Thus was established the fact that the Mauryan Empire under Aśoka extended into the Mysore State and included the larger part of the Deccan. Subsequent discoveries at Maski, Koppal and Erragudi have confirmed this discovery. Our doubts are now only about the dates of the commencement and the end of Mauryan rule in the Deccan. Even for this we have other indications which go to show that in this part of the Deccan, Mauryan rule occupied a period of nearly three generations approximately between 298 and 220 B. C.

The Brahmagiri inscription, and the other two so far as they are preserved, record the transmission of the royal edict from the officers of Suvarṇagiri to those of Isila. The former city is believed to have been the capital of the Deccan province, while Isila was probably the headquarters of a local division. The question naturally arose as to where this Isila was situated. Since the three Mysore inscriptions of Aśoka are close to each other, forming almost a triangle with a base of about three miles and a median of about half a mile, it was clear that a search for the town had to be made in this neighbourhood. Though no structures or other monuments were visible on the surface, a careful study of the ground went to show that an extensive town of about the Mauryan times had flourished in the neighbourhood of the Brahmagiri inscription.

The traveller from Chitaldrug to Bellary meets near Hangal and Molakālmuru a range of rocky hills with an arm lying more to the north and connecting with the range near Bellary. These hills are formed of huge masses of gneiss and granite of varying quality on which rain and sunshine have beaten for ages, splitting the rocks into great boulders, huge tors and slabs of monstrous shapes and sizes. In many places these have been thrown in heaps on the hill sides presenting an almost artificial appearance, like a heap of stones piled up by man. In other places the bare backs of the rocks have been exposed for receiving another instalment of splitting and powdering. The country around the hills is formed either of gravel brought down by rainwater and deposited in a hard bed, or of loose ashy earth thrown into the valleys and pits in the gravel bed and formed perhaps as a result of prehistoric volcanic ashy formations.

In the midst of this district which is studded with hills and hill-ranges and to the north of the Molakālmuru and Nunke hills lies the Brahmagiri hill shaped like a scorpion with its nose and summit to the north and its sloping and tapering tail to the south. Like its projected claws lie the 'Emine Tammana gunḍu' to the north-west and the 'Giribaḷli rocks' to the north-east. Just beyond these from west-south-west to east-north-east stretches the sandy bed of the Saṇṇa Hagari river, with a perennial flow of water mostly hidden by the sands. About two miles to further north lies the Jaṭiṅgi Rāmēśa hill in two masses of granite connected by a saddle. The lower or western one has the famous temple of Rāmēśa whose surroundings are connected with the tradition of Śrī Rāma's search for his abducted wife, while the higher hill or Hire Jaṭiṅgi Rāmēśa has a Uchchaṅgi Pāṇḍya inscription and a small Śiva temple on its top. From a distance on the south the upper part of this hill presents the appearance of a colossal hawk, fallen on the hill with its wing half severed and its eyes running with tears, all in mortal agony. Possibly this was recognised as the body of Jaṭāyu, the heroic bird which was martyred in its efforts to rescue Sitā from Rāvaṇa's flying chariot.

On the plain between Brahmagiri and Jaṭiṅga flows the Saṇṇa Hagari, which must have of old been, as to-day, the chief source of water-supply and irrigation to the neighbouring lands. The modern villages of Siddāpura, Nāgasamudra and Virāpura, Kāḍu-Siddhana-Maṭha, Hanumāpura, Hoskōṭe and Roppa are now maintained by the Saṇṇa Hagari. If the populations of these villages could be collected together near the Brahmagiri hill, there would perhaps be a decent enough town corresponding to ancient Isila.

The right bank of the river Saṇṇa Hagari is lower and better irrigated than the left one and here beyond a stretch of rice fields extending about a mile in width and perhaps five miles in length, rise the hills. The narrowest part of the cultivated strip almost marks the nose of the hill. On either side of the inscription stretch two narrow moundy slopes each triangular in shape with its vertex near the inscription and its tail stretching like the tail of a comet to a distance of six or seven furlongs, the eastern one being slightly larger. Each of these two slopes is cut up by water-courses into mounds some of which rise to a height of about thirty feet from the irrigated level. The eastern slope has particularly the Uḍuvala-Doṇe watercourse arising from a deep cave in the hill-side, in the darkness of which is a cool pool of fresh water. It is bounded on the east by a small tank called Chaudīśvarī-kunṭe on the dam of which is seated a small image of Durgā of about the Chālukya times. To the north of the Chaudīśvarī tank is a high ground abutting the Roppa rocks, the slopes of which are almost entirely covered by hundreds of cromlechs, dolmens and cistvaens. Among the rice fields, here and there, are a few uncultivated islands full of cromlechs.

The western triangle is similar in character, though slightly smaller. It stretches beyond the beautiful granite boulder known as 'Gārē-guṇḍu' or 'Biḷē-guṇḍu,' to the tank close to the Akkataṅgi temple.

The existence of groups of cromlechs near Kāḍu-Siddhana-Maṭha and by the pathway to Hanumāpur and Hoskōte suggests that the area between these and the hill-slopes was not irrigated when these structures were set up. Probably all this enclosed area was part of the old town or city.

The country around Brahmagiri has now all the appearance of a neglected and out of the way corner of human activity far removed from civilisation. But a survey of the hill and the neighbourhood makes it clear that it had its periods of prosperity, two of which at least are well-marked. Seven centuries ago there was the prosperous town of Hāneya flourishing in the fields to the west of the hill. To it belonged the Akkataṅgi temple, the Paḡaḍe-sālu hill temple, the Jain temple and the fort-walls near the foot of the hills. Facing the last named stands the inscription of Vīra Ballāḷa II (c. 1190) who proudly claims that he took the hill-fort of Hāneya and founded the city of 'Vijayana-giri.' Also to this town belong the steps leading from it to the hill, the Triśankēśvara temple and the basements of two palatial buildings, the Bhāgyalakshmi temple and the Hulikunṭe tank on the hill. The Mahal which belongs to the nineteenth century need not of course be considered here. Possibly to the period of prosperity under the Hoysaḷas should be assigned the line of fortifications made up of boulders extending down the northern slopes also. The hill appears to have been once again converted into a fortification in the late Vijayanagar days as is seen from the remains of fort-walls on the hill.

But it is evident that Isila of the Mauryas is very different from the Hoysaḷa town of Hāneya which is nearly fifteen centuries later in date. A close survey of the ground shows that a much older town, apparently Isila, stretched on either side of the Brahmagiri inscription between the ring of cromlechs and slopes of the hills. It was bounded on the east by the Chaudīsvāri tank and the slopes of the Roppa hillock, on the north by the river Hagari and on the west by Emme Tammana guṇḍu and the Akkatangi tank. On the south rises the hill with its caves and rocky platforms bearing clear evidence of having been inhabited by pre-historic man. Almost at the centre of the town right under a series of natural caves formed by a line of rocks spread out like the hoods of a multi-headed cobra, on a whitish granite boulder, Aśoka's officers inscribed their master's commands.

Among the things appearing on the surface, next to the Aśōkan inscription, perhaps the most conspicuous objects in the area are the cromlechs, which abound near both the eastern and the western extremities. They appear to be of all sizes and a variety of shapes. Sometimes on the ground the mouth of a pot is just visible or the four slabs of a small stone-box or cist are seen. Some of these cists are even six feet long and five feet broad, thin slabs being placed swastika-wise, one end of each projecting beyond the square. The more important of these cists are covered by large heavy slabs about 8 feet in diameter and 9 inches or more in thickness. A few of these slabs stick out of the ground and present the appearance of dolmens or table-stones. A majority of the cists have no dolmens. Sometimes around the cist or dolmen small, roundish natural boulders, about one or two cubic feet in size, are placed in a circle forming a ring of stones or a cromlech. Occasionally the ring is large having a diameter of about 30 feet lined on the inside by a rubble structure, the inner face of which has another ring of stones. Though hundreds of these cromlechs have been disturbed by the agriculturists or rifled by the curious, there are hundreds more yet awaiting excavation and study. The variety of structures, their number and extent suggest that they must have been constructed during a long period stretching over hundreds of years. It is now well known that these structures are burials, stretching back to pre-historic times. But their close association with the Mauryan town and the fact that they bear the name "Mauryaramane" or the houses of the Mauryas among the local people indicate that some of them perhaps came into existence in the Mauryan period. The local people however give a traditional account of the Mauryas whom they describe as a pygmy race of men living in these houses and using the round holes in the eastern slabs for entrance. Excavations elsewhere have revealed that inside the cists the bones of dead men of normal size have been collected along with varied pottery.

It has been stated above that to the right and left of the nose of the hill stretch triangular plots of land containing the vestiges of human habitations. Here are to be seen scores of rubble stone structures just visible in the ground which appear to be the foundations or parts of the walls of smallish buildings whose mud walls have disappeared. They have generally their back to the hill. The lines run roughly parallel to the hill-side, their general orientation being from east to west. The mounds between the nose of the hill and Uḍuvala-Donē which rise to a height of 25 to 30 feet from the level of the irrigated lands are noteworthy objects for the archaeologist. Since the plough has been used to till their surface along with the fields surrounding them, prolific evidence of earlier times is found in this area. The fields are strewn about exceedingly thickly with potsherds, brickbats, stone rubble, iron slag and neolithic implements. A canal from Siddāpur tank cuts across this inhabited area. The land on its lower or left side has been irrigated and prepared for rice cultivation. During the dry season, even these wet fields show potsherds here and there mostly of the coloured, polished variety, though one has to search for them; but to the right of the canal, that is between it and the hill, the surface is full of them. A more detailed study of these surface-finds reveals to some extent the contents of the ground below and of the inhabited layers lying below the surface. This so happens because the rains appear to be driving the edge of the loose earth further and further down the side of the hill, the contents of the lower levels also being slowly carried down in a thin layer and thrown on the surface of the fields and mounds.

Mr. Rice's search led to the discovery of the Brahmagiri inscriptions of Aśōka in the heart of the old town area, of the Siddāpur inscription in a cave of the Emme Tammāna guṇḍu and the Jaṭiṅgi Rāmēśa inscription about three miles to the north. In addition he discovered also a number of inscriptions extending from the Rāshṭra kūṭa and Nolamba times to the Hoysala and Vijayanagara times on the Nāgarpaḍe-guṇḍu and elsewhere on the Jaṭiṅgi Rāmēśa hill, on a boulder to the north-west of the Emme Tammāna guṇḍu, on a slab facing the fort-gate of Hāneya and on two slabs in the Triśankēśvara temple. This latter group has little to do with our present study, as also a newly discovered inscription of the Pāṇḍyas of Uchchaṅgi found on the peak of Hire Jaṭiṅgi Rāmēśa. A careful search brought to light only a few objects of interest carved on rocks. On a rock to the right of the road facing Biliguṇḍu and on the eastern rock of the pair called Eḍeguṇḍu were discovered a series of figures consisting of a trident enclosed in a crescent rising out of a circle all mounted on a lance handle. This figure identified by the local people as Bābayya or Pīradēvaru is a symbol of the Islamic martyrs who are honoured in the Muharram festival. Though the identification is not beyond doubt it may be suggested that the figures were caused by some kind of calcium-bearing paint being applied with a brush thus preventing lichens from growing for a long time and showing them light-coloured against the dark background of the rocks.

On the inner face of the western rock of Eḍeguṇḍu were discovered a number of figures and signs caused probably by painting of a similar character. Some of these have the shape of letters forming two lines, the second line being indistinct. In the first line four letters are distinctly visible, each being about 9" long, 6" broad with an interval of about a foot between them. Strangely these marks resemble the later Brāhmi or cave alphabets of about the Sātavāhana times (first century A.D.). The significance of the inscription is under consideration. If it is Brāhmi, it may be the name of some Sātavāhana ruler or officer connected with the ancient town.

The only other inscription connected with the old town is a small piece of a slab of darkish granite, rhomboidal in shape of  $4" \times 8" \times 1\frac{1}{2}"$ . It has a dressed exterior showing a small part of the circumference of a large circular object of about  $2\frac{1}{2}"$  in diameter. The inner face is flatter though slightly concave. The stone was picked up on the slopes of a mound near No. 27 of the map among hundreds of similar stones. It contains what appear to be four Brāhmi letters, each about 1 inch to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  inches long.

No buildings were visible above the ground excepting a wall of round boulders running from the hill down the slopes of the mounds to meet the road to Roppa near a large cromlech about 50 feet in diameter composed of huge megalithic stones on the way from the farm-house to Hoskōṭe. But in the ground close observation revealed the existence of rubble foundations of scores of little buildings on either side of the lanes which originally ran parallel to the hill-side. The approximately equal size of the foundations ( $1\frac{1}{2}$  feet broad), their right angles and their parallel lines forming the lanes between them could be clearly seen, whereas here and there as in the hedge near the farm-house stone foundations of larger dimensions made up of size-stone pieces were also observable. Brick was scarce and it was surmised that this town used stone for the foundations even of huts.

But bricks were not absent. They were observable in the ground near the farm-house where a pathway branches off to Hanumāpur, also near the stone quarry, between it and the inscription and more commonly among the mounds and heaps on either side of Biḷiḡuṇḍu. This suggested that there were brick buildings, though few in number, and that some of these might be buried under the rice-fields near the Brahmagiri inscription.

It is strange that no coins of any sort have been obtainable from the Isila area. Even the villagers of the neighbourhood have no information of any coins having been picked up in the past. One Siddāpur villager produced a Bijapur coin picked up at Hāneya on the west side of the hill and two specimens said to have been found by one Muddaṇṇa of Hoskōṭe could not be produced for examination.

Next to pottery the largest number of objects visible on the surface of Isila were various objects of stone. Some of these were granite pieces of slabs, finely polished on one side. A granite pestle of the same kind, well-polished, was also recovered.

These remind us of the polish of the Mauryan pillars and other objects. Mealing-stones and oval-shaped grinding stones about 6"  $\times$  4"  $\times$  1½" generally and stone discs about 2" in diameter, biscuit-shaped stone objects about 4" in diameter mostly of potstone resembling the mace heads of prehistoric culture, but more probably hingestones for doorways and a wheel stone of reddish sandstone were some objects which may well belong to the Mauryan times. But the stone objects which attracted attention most were neoliths of various types and shapes. There were the round pounders of the size of balls or pieces thereof which were picked up in nearly all parts of the area from Biligundu to near Roppa. There were the usual cone-topped wide-edged axe-heads, and also axe-heads of a ruder make with their converging sides having right-angled corners slightly rounded off. Most of these were of trap-rock. Occasionally there occurred celts of a smaller size, less than 3" long and 2" broad, flat in make, either of trap or of more reddish stones. Natural pebbles or trap pieces well-ground in oval shapes of various sizes from about 2" to 1" were also to be found. Occasionally a stone marble or a largish stone bead was picked up. One or two quartz and chalcedony pieces were also picked up bearing clear signs of being flaked for the production of knives and other microlithic implements. The existence of a microlithic settlement in addition to the Mauryan town and the Neolithic village was suggested by the occurrence of a beautiful quartz borer looking like a spear-head collected from the dunes on the north-east of the hill.

Though not in such abundance as in Chandravalli, occasionally iron slag pieces were collected showing that the old town used iron though the metal was comparatively scarce. A few copper objects also occurred here and there. And a few crucibles pointed to the existence of metal smithy.

One potstone piece was definitely the left hand of an image which perhaps held a sword or similar object. The size of the image was suggested as 3 feet in height. A few conch-shell objects were also picked up, some of them being definitely parts of bracelets and anklets.

The site of Isila is one of the ideal fields for the collection and study of pottery. Though very few fully preserved pots were found, a preliminary study of the surface yielded an extraordinary variety of potsherds. From the necks and other parts of large beakers and urns, various sizes of pottery were indicated down to small hand-made or wheel-made cups about an inch in diameter and ring-like beads of pottery well-fired. There were also pear-shaped beads with their holes indicative of the use of metal or wooden spikes. Quite a number of pottery discs about 2" in diameter evidently made by grinding broken potsherds were also collected. Occasionally there occurred the conical tops of blackware lids, spouts, plain and ornamented, and parts of pottery dishes. But the greatest interest attached to the colour and finish of the pottery. Everywhere the usual unpolished dark-greyware occurred and here and there unpolished redware. But the pieces that caught the eye were those of coloured pots. There was the polished blackware sometimes burnished to the standard of glazed pottery; blackware with incised designs and also very rarely blackware polished with red or white designs painted on it. A number of pieces showed chocolate or dark tan colour with geometrical or plant designs painted in white or whitish red and red. A few pieces showed chocolate painting on lighter brown background. The designs were highly varied and well-conceived and included basket-work, lattice-work, chequered, plant, floral, dotted, screw and other designs. Some rare ornamented pottery had incuse ornamentation. But the other types of blackware and chocolateware had varied incised ornamentation.

There was also a plentiful occurrence of redware pottery painted with a slip and well polished. Some of these pieces bore incised ornamentation of the finger-print, rope, laurel-leaf, zig-zag, and other varieties of design.

The painting on pottery appears to be a noteworthy feature of the ceramic ware occurring at Isila. Connected with the pots, but distinct as a class of earthenware are the bricks and tiles. Pieces of two different kinds of tiles were picked up: the roughly shaped Mangalore tile pattern with two holes occurred in some places, while in others were pieces of the flat round-edged type with the bent head. One piece which appeared to be the portion of a vessel more than of a brick showed ornamentation produced by pressing clay upon a mat of bamboo woven in an artistic pattern.

A surface study of Isila strongly suggested the existence of five stratified layers:

The strata. as follows:

(1) Chālukya-Hoysala, e.g., the image of Chaudēśvarī and possibly the fort-wall of boulders.

(2) A Mauryan town with perhaps a pre-Mauryan commencement and early Sātavāhana ending with its period of highest prosperity in the third century B.C.

(3) A pre-Mauryan town of the iron age using polished blackware pottery or ornamented chocolate-coloured ware connected with the late neolithic period and the early iron age.

(4) A neolithic settlement.

(5) A pigmy flint culture.

The greatest prosperity of the place appears to have been in the period of Aśōka, though the total length of the period covered by the finds would be several thousand years.

The importance of the site of Isila consists in its being a link between the historic empire of the Mauryas and the pre-historic cultures of the Deccan. While, on the one hand, its painted pottery, etc., connect it with the already-known site of Chandravalli whose numerous coins have furnished datable data, on the other it promises to give us three pre-Mauryan strata from which considerable information could be obtained about the cultures of the Deccan in pre-historic times. Isila appears to be a twin of the well-known site of Maski in Hyderabad, while Chandravalli is a twin of the slightly later site of Paithan. A detailed study of Isila by the excavator promises to reveal considerable new information for the student of pre-historic and early Deccan.

Link with pre-history.

A Brief Report of the Excavation work done during the year 1939—40.

The site of Chandravalli near Chitaldrug was recommended for excavation by Sir John Marshall, Director-General of Archaeology in India. Preliminary studies were commenced in 1928 and field work was done for a few weeks in succeeding years. In 1931 the work was closed down with the hope of resuming it at an early date. It was discovered that at Chandravalli lay buried the ruins of a Sātavāhana town of about eighteen hundred years ago. It was the centre of a local government and was a place of considerable industrial and commercial prosperity having trade relations with China and Rome. Mayūraśarma's inscription suggested the continued existence of the town down to about 300 A.D.

In 1929 a study of the Aśōkan inscriptions in the Molakālmuru Taluk suggested the existence of a Mauryan town in the neighbourhood and a preliminary survey disclosed traces of a buried town. In 1931 trial soundings in one or two places revealed the existence of earlier strata below the Mauryan town reaching back to the prehistoric times. Further work was not conducted owing to the general suspension of all excavations.

The revival of excavations was proposed by the Archaeological Department and was supported by scholars like Mr. K. P. Jayaswal, Dr. F. W. Thomas, Sir Leonard Wooley, Mr. Worman of Harvard, and Rao Bahadur K. N. Dikshit, Director-General of Archaeology in India. A sum of Rs. 1,000 was sanctioned for the purpose in the budget for 1939-40 and an Excavation Assistant was sanctioned for two months.

Before proceeding to the field, preliminary work was started at the office, the catalogue of the Chandravalli finds of the previous years being verified. The work of cleaning the antiquities numbering nearly 5,000 and preparing them for study was started in the office cellar and a preliminary study was made of the numismatic and epigraphic data already collected. As soon as the lecturing season in the college was over the Director proceeded to the excavation camp accompanied by the Junior Technical Assistant, the Excavation Assistant, a Pandit, the Photographer and three menials. The work occupied nearly a month, the first portion of the period being spent at Chandravalli and the later one at Brahmagiri.

Since nine years had passed between the last working season and the present one, it was found that the forty different pits and trenches excavated at Chandravalli had become silted up and also seriously damaged and tampered with. It took several days to put them into shape for verification purposes. Some old excavations were extended and a few new pits were sunk, with the object of finding corroboration for the theories formed already about the Śātavāhana town. The lower levels were reached in several places and information was obtained about the existence of the earlier layers and of the characteristics of pre-Śātavāhana pottery. Several new coins, seals, figurines and other antiquities were also unearthed, valuable information being obtained about the political and cultural conditions of the buried town. It was realised that the Pre-Śātavāhana antiquities particularly would be of the greatest value in the excavations at Brahmagiri.

In the neighbourhood of Brahmagiri work was started by a restudy of the inscriptions and a careful survey of the surrounding area.

Excavation at Brahmagiri.

It was surmised that the site for examination covered several square miles lying between the Hagari river and an east to west line passing through the village Roppa. The work of taking soundings in various parts of the area was commenced and as many as eight pits and trenches were sunk. The strata were most carefully excavated and their yields recorded with the help of photographs and drawings. Among the pieces of information collected may be mentioned the following :

The disposal of the dead, funerary pottery and customs, the discovery of an apsidal brick building, probably a Buddhist Chaitya, the discovery of several strata of a long lived town the upper layers of which are assignable to the Mauryan period, while the lower layers stretch far back into the pre-history of South India, the discovery of varied ceramic ware including red ware, red and brown ornamented ware, polished black ware, ornamented chocolate coloured ware, varied black and red ware with incised ornamentation, and stone and brick foundations of houses, most of which belong to the long-lived pre-historic town which came under Mauryan rule for a short time perhaps during its last days. The discovery of this definitely pre-historic town site is of first rate importance for our knowledge of South Indian history, since the latter has till now begun with the Mauryan connection.

It was also found that below the pre-historic town there was an extensive neolithic settlement in the place for several thousands of years and that below this full neolithic level there was a clearly identifiable microlithic settlement connecting the neolithic with the palaeolithic. The age for the corresponding culture in Europe is about 10,000 years ago. It is most fortunate that we have discovered near Brahmagiri, buried remains of South Indian life pertaining to little known periods of South Indian pre-history.

The discovery of pottery in the various strata is of very great importance since in the present state of the archaeological knowledge of the Dakhan no criteria are known for dating pre-historic finds.

Ceramics. There appears to be now a chance of our making a valuable contribution to the history of pottery in the Dakhan which may lead to some method of sequence dating for South Indian pre-history.

About twenty boxes of excavation finds are now in Mysore. In addition to the old finds from Chandravalli these new finds have also to be arranged, catalogued, cleaned and studied in relation to the literature already available on the subject. This involves several months of work in the office, its library and laboratory.

Further work at Mysore. Since the results of the Chandravalli Excavations are awaited by the archaeologists, the publication of the monograph on Chandravalli monograph. Chandravalli has first to be taken up. The monograph will be a scientific work on the model of Sir John Marshall's Mohenjo Daro with descriptions of the excavation, descriptions of the finds, more than 5,000 in number, and chapters on political history, inscriptions, numismatics, buildings, ceramics, ornaments, implements, industries, trade, etc.

The results of the work done at Brahmagiri, though definite and highly important, can be claimed to be only the commencement of an important excavation. It is necessary to conduct much further work first in the shape of studying this season's finds at Mysore and then conducting further trial excavations at Brahmagiri with the intention of sounding the other parts of the vast area and locating the centres of the Mauryan area, the pre-historic town area, the neolithic area and the microlithic area. This itself would involve another season's work. After these centres are determined, detailed excavations would have to be conducted with proper facilities and assistance.

Future work at Brahmagiri.

PART V—NUMISMATICS.

PALLAVA COINS.

When the Pallavas assumed independence in the third century A.D., they appear to have retained the bull type on the obverse and to have changed the wheel on the reverse to a sun, into whose disc other marks entered in course of time. The sun on the reverse, often with the sceptre and conch, may be taken to distinguish the Pallava issues from the Southern Andhra ones. The Pallava coins are also thicker, heavier and more round and have a more elaborate border. These characteristics are common to the bull and lion types. One coin of the bull type has a Brāhmi legend which appears to read 'Sataka'. Many specimens of the lion type have the legend 'Vishamasiddha',<sup>1</sup> a title borne by Kubja Vishnūvardhana of the Eastern Chālukya dynasty.<sup>2</sup>

The metals used for the Pallava coins are mostly silver and brass for the lion type and copper for the bull type. It is possible that the bull type and the lion type belong to two contemporary dynasties which perhaps ruled at two different places like Kañchi and Veṅgi.

TYPE A.—Bull and Sun.

1. Ae. '7. Large and thick.

Obverse:—Within border of two linear circles with dotted line between them, large humped bull standing to right. In front of it, floral creepers; legend on top of bull.

Reverse:—Small sun in centre with long rays emanating.

TYPE B.—Bull and Sceptre.

2. Ae. '75. Large and thick.

Obverse:—Similar but legend uncertain.

Reverse:—Sun, in whose large disc is a hooked rod, perhaps sceptre between two lampstands.

TYPE C.—Bull and Conch.

3. Ae. '65. Half size.

Similar to 2, but rude conch instead of sceptre.

4. Ae. '5. Quarter size.

Similar to 2.

1. Guntur plates. Also Jouveau Dubreuil: An. Hist., D. p. 53.

2. Hultzsch: I.A., 1896; p. 321. Also Smith: I.H.C., Pl. XXX, No. 1.

5. Ae. '45. Small.

Similar to 2, but figures much conventionalised.

The changes of the reverse device indicate that 1, 2, 3 and 5 belong to four different generations of rulers. The sun of 1 has practically disappeared from No. 5.

TYPE D.—Lion and Conch.6. Ar. Much alloy. '75. Wt. 103·9 grs., large and heavy and thick.

Obverse :—In triple border of two linear circles with dotted line between them, large maned lion to right with open mouth and head; left forepaw and tail uplifted. In front of it, floral creepers.

Reverse :—In sun's disc, a large conch with mouth upward between two lamp-stands.

7. Ae. Similar to 6.

The lion on Mādhariputra Sakasēna's coins from the Gōdāvarī and Kṛishṇā districts<sup>1</sup> may be the prototype of the Pallava lion, though some difference in the mouth and forepaws is noticeable.

CHERA COINS.

TYPE A.—Bow and Lamp.Variety (A)*—Sword.1. Ae. '65. Thick and slightly concave.<sup>2</sup>

Obverse :—In large ring of rude large dots are a strung bow to left and a lighted lamp to right. Between them is a sword, represented by a hilt and three dots standing for the blade.

Reverse :—In linear circle, between two lamps is the section view of a lasin placed on a stand. In it are two swords crossed points downwards with ten pellets in the angle between the hilts above.

This type with the 'drum' and the bow has been generally known as the 'Chēra' or Kongu type. These names are also applied to the 'Gajapati' or elephant type. The two types are very different and it would be better to classify the bow and lamp type as Chēra and the elephant type as Gaṅga, avoiding the name Kongu which may be ambiguous. The bow and lamp appear on the obverses of this type along with other symbols which change. The bow appears on Āndhra coins of C. 85 A.D. and again on some Chōḷa coins of Rājendra Chōḷa. It may have been an Āndhra symbol used at first in the south-west of their empire including Kolhāpur and Banavāsi,<sup>3</sup> which later became localised in North Kerala, with which area it is subsequently associated. It is also present on a punch marked gold coin which may be early Chālukya or Yādava. Whether it had any connection with the old Tamil designation of the Chēra kings 'Villavan', Bowman, is not definitely known.

The lamp indicates in Hindu life, as also on the coins, something sacred for the worship of which it is lit.

Between the bow and the lamp are generally one or two symbols which vary, perhaps indicating that they are the issues of different rulers. One of such symbols is the sword whose hilt is clearly seen. The dotted blade shows a highly conventionalised condition of art and suggests that earlier issues with better figures preceded this specimen. The earliest use of this type may have been several generations before No. 1 was issued.

The reverse figure has often been described as a 'drum shaped' object.<sup>1</sup> It is more probably an altar on which two swords are placed crossed, perhaps for worship. They might be the swords of a king and possibly of a crown prince or co-regent. The significance of the dots, which are ten or less on the different specimens, is uncertain.

Elliot attributes this type to the Gaṅgas on the ground that the use of the die shows them to be later than the Chēra times. There are no clear historical records of the Chēras, though for a considerable time the Chēras occupied a position of subordination under the Chōḷas and Pāṇdyas. The Chēras appear to have been in possession of part of the Kongu country where the Gaṅgas attained to power later. But as the latter had as their special device the elephant and not the bow, the bow and lamp series is attributed here to the Chēras.<sup>2</sup>

2. Ae. '55.

Obverse :—Similar to 1. In place of the sword, there are two pellets flanked by two hilts one on each side, perhaps standing for two daggers.

Reverse :—Similar to 1, but the basin and the swords are more conventionalised showing probable later date.

3. Ae. 5.

Obverse :—Similar to 2, but with four dots in square form, instead of two.

Reverse :—Similar to 1, but swords clearly visible.

4. Similar to the above but with dagger surmounted by circle and reversed position of lamp and bow on obverse.

5. Similar, but weapon looks more like a cross bilted dagger.

6. Similar, but weapon looks like a combined battle axe and sword.

1. E.C.S.I., p. 117.

2. Mr. Aravamudan has collected some information about the Chēras in his book "The Cauvery, Mankaris and the Sangam Age". See also Bulletin of the School of Oriental Studies, London, 1925, Review by Dr. Barnett.

Variety (B)—Battle axe and sword.

7. Similar to 2, the weapons are a battle axe and sword.

The battle axe which is presumably the famous axe of Paraśurāma may be the special symbol of Kēraḷa with its centre near Tiruvanantapuram (Trivandrum). The present variety may indicate some king whose name or religion was specially connected with Paraśurāma or it may suggest a Chēra conquest of South Kēraḷa.

Variety (C)—Lamp.

8. Obverse:—Similar to 2 but with tall dome-topped lamp flanked by three dots on each side in place of the weapon.

Reverse:—Similar to 2, but swords have become conventionalised into lines without hilts.

Variety (D)—Dagger and uncertain weapon.

9. Obverse:—Similar to 2, but with short dagger (?) and a two-pronged weapon (?) in place of sword.

Reverse:—Similar to 8.

The two weapons on the obverse together form a figure which is somewhat like the human figure on Rapson's Andhra Coins No. 2.

Variety (E)—Lamp in basin.

10. Similar to 2, but in place of the weapon and lamp is a basin with a light burning in it. The bow is on top.

Variety (F)—Arches.

11. Similar to 2, but between the bow and the lamp is a figure composed of four arches based on a line of five dots, which may represent either a Chaitya symbol or a weapon called 'Vajra-Mushti' commonly used by the wrestling caste in South India.

Variety (G)—Lion face.

12. Similar to 2, but the central figure appears to be the conventionalised face of a lion with brows, eyes, nose, teeth and chin visible.

Variety (H)—Elephant.

13. Ae. '45.

Reverse :—Similar to No. 2.

This kind of elephant, standing with lowered trunk and lifted tail is nearer to the Gaṅga 'Gajapati' type than to the usual Āndhra elephant types.<sup>1</sup> They connect the Chēras with the Gaṅga country and may belong to the early part of the period of transition from Chēra to Gaṅga power, from the bow type to the 'Gajapati' elephant type.

Obverse :—Within circle of dots, to right<sup>2</sup>, five-pointed lamp post with four dots near top, a smaller lamp in left field and below it a small elephant to left with uplifted tail.

Reverse :—As usual.

15. Ae. 59 grs.

Obverse :—Bow and five-pointed pillar with dagger (?) and four large dots in the centre.

Reverse :—Worn.

16. Ae. Round. 62·1 grs.

Obverse :—From left to right :—(1) A strung bow; (2) a bell or spear placed on a stand; and (3) a burning lamp.

Reverse :—The drum-like vessel appears with crossed swords. Above this symbol may be noticed an ornamental figure. The coin appears to be a very strange type.

17. Ae. Round. 53·5 grs.

Obverse :—In ring of dots may be seen from left to right a lamp and a bell-like symbol with three dots above.

Reverse :—Effaced.

Could the symbol on the obverse represent a temple mark? The coin is of a very rare type.

18. Ae. Round. 57·1 grs.

Obverse :—In ring of dots are to be seen from left to right: a strung bow, a banner, a fish and a lamp. The top of a lamp appears below the fish.

Reverse :—Between two lamps may be observed the following marks: a basin placed on a stand with two crossed swords inside. Above the swords are visible four dots representing part of a dotted circle. There is a lamp on each side of the basin.

Does the fish mark on the obverse denote the Chēra conquest of the Pāṇḍya country? The coin seems to be a very rare specimen.

19. Ae. Round. 55·2 grs.

Obverse:—A strung bow in dotted circle. An eight-pointed solar mark in square with uncertain symbols on three of its sides.

Reverse:—Completely effaced.

This coin too is a very rare type.

20. Ae. Thick. 66 grs. Slightly worn.

Obverse:—In circle of dots, two thunderbolt-like marks with dots on both sides. Strung bow to left and five-pointed pillar to right.

Reverse:—A peculiar design probably representing some drumshaped altar. Two rows of dots above.

21. Ae. Round. 49·4 grs.

Obverse:—A trident and two uncertain symbols.

Reverse:—Uncertain. Perhaps a basin on stand.

KADAMBA AND MINOR KANNADA DYNASTIES.

[EARLY KADAMBA (OF BANAVASI?)]

TYPE A.—Lotus and Punch Marks. (C. 400?)

1. Al. 7. Wt. 66·8 grs. Padma-Tanka Varaha.

Obverse:—Covering the whole obverse is a large eight-petalled lotus flower or padma; four alternate petals are shaped like conches; a pellet within a small circle marks the centre of the flower.

Reverse:—Six small punch marks; the four larger ones form a square and contain a small flower each; the two smaller ones have no figures and are punched one on each side of one of the larger marks.

This type is perhaps the original padma-tanka as the most important mark thereon is a large lotus struck with a single die. This coin, die-struck on one side and punch-marked on the other, appears to belong to a very early period. The lotus appears to be connected with the lotus evolving out of the wheel on the late Southern Āndhra coins which perhaps belong to about 200 A.D. The return of gold as the standard metal denotes some economic change from the Āndhra times. The weight of this specimen, 66·8 grains, is the usual Kadamba standard which is retained by the later Kadambas of Goa and other dynasties till about 1158 A.D.

TYPE B.—Lotus and Lion.

2. Ae. 5.

Obverse:—In circle of dots, eight-petalled lotus, with a pellet between each pair of petals, standing perhaps for a second row of petals.

Reverse:—In circle of dots, rude maneless lion to left, with head looking back. Instead of a snout, the animal has a long turned up beak or trunk. Is it a yāli?

The reverse of this coin is different from that of No. 1, but the obverse is similar. This coin belongs to about the same period as No. 1. A beaked lion or gryphon is rather uncommon in Indian Art. Its real significance here is doubtful. Perhaps it indicates some foreign influence. But as it looks back like the Kadamba lions, this specimen is attributed to the Kadambas.<sup>1</sup>

MINOR KADAMBA.

TYPE C.—Lion and Ornamental Lotus.

3. Al. Wt. 63 grains. Double die struck. E.C.S.I., Nos. 17 and 70. No. 70 is perhaps the original of which No. 17 is a copy. The two belong to the same type and are described here as one coin.

Obverse:—Linear circle with petals springing out. In it, standing to right on an ornamental tree branch, is a large maned lion, with lifted tail and open jaws looking backward; its left foot is lifted up and rests on the curled up floral end of the tree branch. Below the branch is an old Kannaḍa legend reading most probably: Si va ra (Sivaratha—last letter doubtful).

Reverse:—Uncertain ornamental figure appearing as a lotus flower in Elliot's No. 17 (Conch?). Around it is a complex ornamental border composed of linear circle, dotted circle, linear circle and the outermost circle of petals perhaps representing a lotus.

The characters are nearer to 1000 A.D. than to 500 A.D. If the legend is Sivaratha, the coin may, with much hesitation, be attributed to a Kadamba prince of Banavāsi who lived in C. 500 A.D. and was the son of Mṛigeśavarma (475-488). The weight is less than the usual Kadamba standard and remains to be explained. It is possible that the Hoysala standard was adopted by some Kadamba feudatory of the eleventh century. There are double punch marks both on the obverse and reverse.

TYPE—Hanuman and Lion.

4. Al. 5. Thick and cup-shaped. Wt. 65.5.

Obverse:—A large punch mark containing a tailed monkey with bent knees moving to right on what looks like a tree branch (or elephant goad). The hands hold something large and round, perhaps a fruit.

Reverse:—In small linear ring (from reverse die) a long-nosed maneless lion standing with looped tail lifted up and looking backwards.

This perhaps belongs to a period when the die and the punch were both used, as on No. 1. The Kadambas, especially those of Hangal, had the retrospectant lion crest and the monkey banner.<sup>1</sup>

TYPE D.—Hanuman and Ornamental Lotus.

5. Al. Wt. 65.1.

Reverse:—In complex lotus border is an uncertain figure which may be a highly conventionalised lion looking backward.

The characters are more like those of the twelfth century<sup>2</sup> and the name does not belong to any well known king. Elliot suggests that it may refer to Naka-rēśvara of Bankapur. Many other towns with flourishing merchant-guilds may have had their own god Nagarēśvara or Town-Lord. The use of 'ka' for 'ga' shows imitation of Tamil spelling. The usual deep double punch marks are found both on the obverse and on the reverse. Nos. 4 and 5 may belong to the Kadambas of the main or of the Hangal branch.

TYPE E.—Four Punched Lions.

6. Al. 75. Wt. 58.2

Obverse:—Seven punch marks. In the centre is a large<sup>3</sup> ornamental pond with an eight petalled lotus in the middle. On each side of it is a punch mark containing a maned lion to right with tail lifted and looped, head turned back, jaws open and left forepaw uplifted. As on No. 1, two deeply impressed small punch marks without any symbols on them.

Reverse:—In linear circle surrounded by dots, elaborate floral design as on Gaṅga coins.

7. Al. 7. Wt. 58.5

Obverse:—Similar to No. 6, with only slight differences.<sup>4</sup> The tails of the lions are not looped but curved back. The pond is more conventionalised and the lotus is replaced by a pellet. The two deeply indented marks exist as on Nos. 1 and 6, showing that they were made intentionally.

Reverse:—Similar to No. 2.

<sup>4</sup> E.C.S.I. No. 15.

8. Al. Wt. 58 grains. Figured in E.C.S.I. as No. 13.

Similar to No. 7, but lions to left, not maned, and long snouted; in the pond a swastika in place of the pellet. Two deep punch marks as usual.

Nos. 4, 7, and 8 belong to a class by themselves. The two deep punch marks, evidently intentionally made relate them to No. 1; the retrospectant lions to Nos. 2 and 3; and the floral reverse to the Gaṅga Gajapati type with whose weight of 59 grains, their 58·5 agrees. But No. 1 and some other Kadamba coins weigh 66·6 grains. This difference in weight remains to be explained, otherwise this type could be assigned to some branch of the early Kadambas connected with the Gaṅgas. Probably the Gaṅgas took their standard and their reverse from this type, substituting the lion with their own elephant. Nos. 6, 7, 8 are stated by Elliot to have come from north Karnataka otherwise called the southern Mahratta country, which the Kadambas were ruling. If the lions looked forward, the Gaṅga-Pallavas could have been the probable authors of this type.

Another dynasty whose authorship of these coins is also possible is the great Rāshtrakūṭa dynasty. The weight of these coins 58·5 is the same as the weight of the early Kalyāṇi Chālukya ones and the punch-marking is similar. The reverse appears only on the later coins of the Gaṅgas who were connected with the Rāshtrakūṭas. The early Rāshtrakūṭas may have had the lion as their device.

TYPE F.—Crown and Floral Reverse.

9. Wt. 60 grains. Figured in E.C.S.I. as No. 18.

Obverse:—A pavilion with double pillars and rafters showing. On top two circles with pellets standing perhaps for lotuses. In central field is a crown.

Reverse:—Floral reverse as on No. 6.

This description is from the drawing in E.C.S.I. It is doubtful if this coin is definitely Kadamba. It may be the issue of one of the feudatories of the Kadambas or of the Gaṅgas.

KADAMBA—GOA BRANCH.

Jayakesi.

TYPE—Lion.

10. Al. From E.C.S.I. No. 71.

Obverse:—In linear circle surrounded by ring of dots with sun and moon above, stands a large maned lion to left, with face to front, open jaws, right forepaw raised and tail lopped up. In front of the lion is a Nāgari legend: 'Pra mo da' the cyclic year of minting probably.

Reverse.—In border similar to obverse, five line Nāgari legend in fine Dēva-nāgari characters :

Srī Sapta kō
ṭī śa la bdha va ra vī ra Ja ya kō śi de va ma la va
ra mā ri

The legend means "The brave king Jayakesi, who obtained boons from Śrī Sapta Kōṭīśa, and who is the goddess of destruction to the Malavas (hill people). 'Pramoda' is one of the sixty cyclic years. The first a of Malavas is short and the word does not refer to the Mālavas of Central India. The form 'Malava' for the people of 'Male' is perhaps due to popular Kannaḍa pronunciation.

Siva Chitta (c. 1158).

TYPE—Lion.

11. Al. 7. wt. 66.9 (large double dies).

Obverse.—Similar to 10, but lion ruder, long nosed and long eared, and looking and running to left. Nāgari letter in front: Nya.

Reverse.—Similar to 10. Legend :

Srī Sapta kō
ṭī sva labdha va ra Si
va chi tta vi ra Hē mā
dī dē va ra Mā la va ra mā ri

The legend means: King Sivachitta, the lord of Hēmādi, the goddess of destruction to the Mālavas (Mā is long) who obtained boons from Śrī Sapta Kōṭīśva" (ra is missing). What Hēmādi stands for has to be explained. The 'ra' of 'Dēvara' is a popular modification of the nominative termination 'ru' in Dēvaru.

12. Similar to 11 but letter on obverse seems to be different.

The legend on the reverse is :

. . . Sa labdha va ra Si va chi tta Vīra Hē mā dī dē va ra Mā la va ra mā ri

'Vīra' appears after chitta and in 'Mālava' Mā is long.

13. Similar. But legend on obverse seems to be different.

The legend on the reverse reads:—

(1) Srī . . . . . Kō
(2) ṭī sva la bdha va ra Si
(3) va chitta vīra Hē ma
(4) dē dīvara Ma la
(5) vara ma ri.

'Ma' is short.

Soyideva.

TYPE—Lion.

14. Ai. From E.C.S.I. No. 69.

Obverse :—Similar to No. 10, but lion ruder, long nosed and long eared and looking left. In front Nāgari legend of two letters, uncertain.

Reverse :—Similar to No. 10; legend :

Srī Sa pta Kō
ti sva ra cha ra ṇa la bdha va ra vī ra Sō yi dē va

The legend means : “ The brave Sōyidēva, who obtained boons from the feet of Śrī Sapta Kōṭisvara.”

15. Similar to 10 but legend on obverse is ‘ṭa’ and on the reverse :

(1)
(2) ra cha ra
(3) bdha va ra pra sa
(4) da Sō vi dē va
(5) va ra mā ri.

Uncertain King

TYPE—Lion.

16. Ai. 65. Inferior metal.

Obverse :—Similar to 10, no legend in front, but an uncertain mark behind.

Reverse :—Similar to 1; legend barbarous :

(1) Sri
(2) Kō ti
(3) sa va ra

The lion of the Goa Kadambas resembles the early Kadamba lion in its raised head, large ears, looped tail and raised forepaw; but it looks forward like the Āndhra and Chālukya lions and not backward like the old Kadamba lion. The facing lion is similar to the one on the Hoysala coins. The fragmentary legends on the obverse may indicate the names of the years as in the case of ‘Pramoda’.

PART VI—MANUSCRIPTS.

Through the courtesy of the Deputy Commissioner, Kolar District, about thirty-two palm leaf manuscripts were secured for examination from a private gentleman residing at Ulsoor. These manuscripts are of varied interest dwelling on architecture, sculpture, dancing and the like; but they are all incomplete so that they cannot be reviewed without the help of other copies which may have been preserved elsewhere complete. Among the manuscripts, the following may be mentioned :—

12. Nānāgama-sāra—No. 7. Describes the principles enunciated in Vātula, Kāmika, Kīraṇa, Lalita and other Āgama books and dwells on Sahasra-kalāśa sthāpana, Ekādaśa-vyūha, Samprōkshaṇa-vidhi, etc.

13. Śaivāgama-prayōga—No. 12. Telugu characters. Is concerned with the worship offered to the god Sōmanātla and describes Śiva-kumbha sthāpana, Gaurī-bīja, Maṇṭapa-pūje, Bali-prayōga, Utsavaprayōga, etc.

14. Siddhānta-sārāvali—A treatise on dancing ; but incomplete.
15. Syāmalā-Daṇḍaka—No. 35. A composition of Kālidāsa. Printed.
16. Śiva-Pañchāksharī—No. 18. Telugu characters. Printed.
17. Mahānyāsa—No. 19. Telugu characters. Printed.
18. Ratna-Parikshā—No. 29. Telugu language and characters. The book is similar to the 'Ratna Pariksha' written in Kannaḍa by Bālavaidya Chaluva (Catalogue of the Oriental Library, No. B. 69). The manuscript contains also the Yaksha Gāna play entitled the 'Karibhaṇṭana Kāḷaga' in the Telugu language.
19. Venkaṭagiri Mahātmya—No. 80. Printed.
20. Nandi Bharata—No. 41. Telugu characters, with Telugu commentary. Describes the various mudrās and postures in abhinaya.
21. Yantra-śāstra—No. 31. Grantha characters. Contains the Dēvi-māhātmya, Māraṇa-prakriya, Svarṇa Gaurī-vrata, etc.
22. A manuscript bearing No. 15 contains several jātakas, letters, and copies of certain vyavasthā-patras or settlement deeds regarding the worship, procession, etc., of the gods Yaragēśvara, Sōmēśvara and so on in Kolar during certain festivals like the Karaga, the Car Festival, etc. Copies of certain grants in Kannaḍa and Telugu are also recorded in the manuscript among which is a grant of the time of Dēva Rāya I, the Vijayanagar King. It is dated in Kali 4518, Śaka 1326, Pārthiva sam. Jyēshṭha śu 1 Wednesday corresponding to Wednesday, April 29, 1405 A.D., though the given Kali year must have been 4506 and the Śaka year 1327. The inscription records that when the Mahārājādhirāja Rāja-paramēśvara Vīra-pratāpa Dēvarāya mahārāya was ruling the kingdom of the world, on Wednesday Kali 4518, Śaka 1326, Pārthiva sam. Jyēshṭha śu 1, by order of the great minister Nāgaṇṇa Daṇṇāyaka, in the time of Kemparāya Daṇṇāyaka, the Mahāsāmāntādhipati Ibari Nāyaka and the Nāḍa-prabhu of Kōlāla Mukkaṇṇajīya, Sonnegauḍa and Yirigiseṭṭi made a grant of the villages of Dēvaṇḍahalli, Yeḍehalli, Donehalli and Maḍērahalli as also the lands on the Śataśrīṅgaparvata and the wet and dry lands, gardens, etc. belonging to Madavaḷa together with all the rights (specified) belonging thereto, free of all imposts, to Sōmēśvarasvāmi of Kōlāla, otherwise called the new Kailāsa, Gangādhareśvarasvāmi, Cheluva Sōmēśvarasvāmi and Antaragaṅge-Amṛitēśvarasvāmi, for their decorations, offerings and festivals, to last as long as the Sun and Moon endure. Ibari Nāyaka (called Hebbere Nāyaka elsewhere) and Yirigiseṭṭi are mentioned in Kolar 83 which is another record of the time of Dēva Rāya I. The latter record is dated in 1417 A.D., but it also mentions wrongly the Kali year 4518. Thus the mention of the Kali year in the present record is faulty. The villages mentioned in the record are all mostly in the neighbourhood of Kōlār, while the Śataśrīṅgaparvata is the name given to the Kōlār hills. The record is under examination.

Translation.

Lines 1—3.

The earth did not shake, the sea was not agitated, the elephants of the quarters did not lose their balance, the people of the middle region did not take fright, the mountains did not tremble; it is really wonderful that he thus raised the earth all at once—In these words did the angels praise Varâha who plunged below and raised up the earth safely on one of his tusks. May the Varâha bring us happiness now.

Lines 3—5.

The Kalpa tree that is Vishṇu appeared beautiful with (the goddess) Lakshmi as the Kalpa creeper, the ocean as the water surrounding, arms as the branches, the bright Kaustubha jewel as sprouts. As if it were a flower of this tree which would ripen into the fruit of the creation of the three worlds was the lotus at the navel of Vishṇu.

Lines 5—6.

In that Lotus was born Brahma like a bee with the sweet sound of the Vedas, free from all faults. In his spotless mind was born Atri. His son born from the eyes was Sôma.

Lines 7—11.

From the lotus is born Brahma; Atri is born from the lotus the heart of Brahma; Sôma sprang from the lotus, the eye of Atri and hence the whole dynasty became the birth-place of lotus (all their descendants were blessed with prosperity). The dynasty of Sôma became famous on account of Sôma, Budha, Purûrava, the prosperous Âyu, the pure king Nahusha, Yayâti and Yadu. After the birth of Yadu, the lineage of Sôma became (known as) the lineage of Yadu. Several noble kings who ruled the earth well were born in that lineage.

Lines 12—19.

One of the descendants of this family was addressed by a Yati who, while engaged in religious austerities, saw a tiger spring upon him and commanded "Strike (poy), O Saḷa," and thereupon Saḷa slew it with a stick and since then he and the members of the Yādava family to which he belonged were known as Poysaḷas everywhere. In that lineage rose Vinayāditya who shone with a brilliance five thousand times as great as that of the sun. Like the sun to the Udaya mountain, like the circle of light to the disc of the sun was the son Ereyanga to Vinayāditya. Three sons named Ballāḷa, Bittidēva, and Udayāditya were born to Ereyanga.

Lines 19—24.

Of these sons of Ereyanga, the middle one Viṣṇuvardhana ruled the earth bringing distinction to the Yadu race and possessed of the fine character of the early kings. When king Viṣṇu went on a military expedition, Talakāḍu became reduced to dust, Talemale became a waste, Kanchi was ruined, Terēyūr . . . . Tuḷunāḍu became reduced to ashes, Banavase, Nangali, Kongu and Konkana (were destroyed). From the dust of the army of Bittiga the ocean became muddy and the hostile warrior kings were forced to perform three kinds of viṭṭi (forced labour). His son, king Vijaya Narasimha, seemed to be the embodiment of Śiva's fiery eye and god Narasimha's anger.

Lines 25—38.

To king Vijaya Narasimha and his senior queen Ēchaladēvi was born Ballāḷadēva. The lofty Uchchangi hill—which scorns the Kailāsa and Mēru mountains that received injury once from Rāvaṇa and others and were again joined to the earth—was captured by the powerful king Ballāḷa who trampled down on the Pāṇḍya lineage and made it sink down to Pātāḷa. How shall I praise this king who is a Rama in battle and who seized the famous forts of Erambarage, Virāṭa's fort (Hānagal), Gutti, Bellittage, Retṭahalli, Soratūr, and Kurugōḍ from hostile kings who were full of prowess and determination? When does the earth which has become wet with the blood of the terrible enemies killed dry up? In the midst of huge hills of the corpses of the enemies when will a road be formed? When does Māri become hungry again?—In such a manner did king Ballāḷa slay the Sēvupa army in battle. Seeing this energetic and victorious being Ballāḷa, the Pāṇḍya king ran away, Murāri and Kāmabhūpāla ran away . . . . Vikkarasa also ran away leaving all his powerful forces. The kings of the earth bring tribute to Ballāḷa seeing that with the rage of a lion he strikes an elephant against another elephant and feeling that they should not incur his wrath. The sound of the twang of the bow made by the southern emperor (king Ballāḷa) strikes Pātāḷa with force, pervades the atmosphere, rushes from earth and pierces the corners of cardinal directions, . . . the seas and makes the wives of hostile kings tremble in their hearts. The single umbrella of Ballāḷadêva has become the support of all royal qualities, its shade is liberality, its stick the quality of piercing the enemy in battle. . . . [The next stanza cannot be translated owing to lacunæ].

Lines 38—41.

Be it well : While the refuge of the whole universe, favourite of good fortune and earth, . . . . lord of the excellent city of Dvârâvatî, a sun in the firmament the Yâdava race, crest-jewel of the all-knowing, lord over the Male chiefs, vanquisher of Malepas, terrible in battle, sole warrior, unassisted hero, Śanivârasidhi, Giridurgamalla, a Râma in moving battle, possessed of undoubted valour, emperor Viraballâḍadêvarasa was ruling in peace and wisdom at the capital Dôrasamudra :

Lines 41—43.

Excelling everything and baffling thought was the brilliant fame of Achalaprakâśasvâmi, worshipped in the kingdom (of Ballâḷa), worthy of devotion by all people and deeply versed in the Vêdas, Vêdânta, śâstra, tarka, tantra, grammar, smṛiti, purâṇa, poetry, drama, Vâtsyâyana (erotic science), prosody, figures of speech, fine arts, and also skilled in all the yôgas and yôgângas including the schools of Hiranyagarbha, Kapila and Patañjali.

Lines 44—50.

The world-famed Viraballâḷa respected the chief of sages, Achalaprakâśa knowing that he was well-versed in the interpretation of Vasishṭha-Yôga and heard a discourse from him on the subject. His (Achalaparakâśa's) great guru Paramahamsa, was the son of Sarasvatî Bhaṭṭa Nârâyaṇasvâmi and was a Brahma in the four Vêdas, a Shapmukha in the six ângas of the Vêdas, a Viṣṇu in the Smṛitis, Nyâya and Mīmāṃsa, a Rudra in the knowledge of the three kâṇḍas.

Hari (Viṣṇu) is a hamsa (swan) ; Ravi (sun) is a hamsa ; the chief of birds is also called hamsa (swan). But he is a Paramahamsa (great swan) combining in his name all the three :—he is a swan to the lotuses the good sages ; he is a hamsa (sun) to the darkness, the Cupid ; he is a hamsa (Viṣṇu) in being devoted to the protection of worthy men. Whoever shines like him in all the universe ? The sage Paramahamsa is sporting like a swan in the pure lake of Advaita, the four-fold sâdhanas (ways to salvation) full of constant kindness to all forming its dam, the Vêdas constituting the beautiful lotus-cluster spreading beauty (good teaching) and his disciples being the swans.

Lines 50—66.

Achalaparakâśa is a parrot, beautiful with fine wings (an ornament to good people), tasting the sweetness of the ripe fruit bringing bliss even to one enjoying more than the hundred-fold bliss (referred to in the Taittiriya Upanishad) growing on the Kalpa tree, that is the Śruti, with the ten Upanishads as its branches, and the letters (constituting the Samhitâ) as its leaves, and the words (constituting the padapātha of the Vēdas) as its flowers. With the mind concentrated in the forehead and the five life-breaths standing motionless in the mind, the eyes remaining as if half-closed, the lotus seat remaining firm as if soldered, the yōga pose showing itself in the hands, the beauty of the continuous enjoyment of samādhi (absorption of the mind in God) showed itself in Achalaprakāśa. He would be engaged every day in discourses on Śruti, Smṛiti, and the Purāṇas quoting authorities from the śāstras impromptu and with fine gestures of hands and respectful hearing and would keep the audience in raptures (?) With his teeth shining brightly. . . . Achalaprakāśa would speak eloquently in the assemblies. Achalaprakāśa fully deserves his name: he is achala (unwavering) in his yōga (concentration with or without breathing exercises), niyōga (daily vocation) and bhāva (ideas); he is firm in his understanding; his skill in the mantras and kalās is strong; he has always got good disciples; his faith in dharma, his honesty, self-restraint and calmness of mind are unshakable. The seven angas (elements) of the sovereignty of kings are defective; seeing this the kingdom of yōga consisting of eight elements of the ever beneficent Achalaprakāśa seems to laugh. The sage Achalaprakāśa is surely very strong because the ten karaṇas (organs) ran away to the ten directions and the six enemies (passions) unable to bear the burden remained behind! The sage Achalaprakāśa is a Vidyādhara in speech as his words in the assembly of learned men are full of nine rasas (emotions), his speech in the midst of ascetics is full of the light of philosophy, in all the great assemblies his speech is full of six rasas and is highly famed.

All the samśyas (religious systems) are to him like pearls in the hand. In the mantra (incantations), tantra (ritual), and in yantra (art of preparing magic charms), in mathematics, music (gāndharva), erotics, architecture (vāstu), medicine, literature, drama, only Achalaprakāśa is well versed. Who else knows them? How lofty is Achalaprakāśa, knower of all kalās, whose stay at an assembly makes it worthy of adoration, whose great decision is like a law (śāsana?) . . . . In praise of the knowledge of fourteen vidyas possessed by Achalaprakāśa, Brahma skilfully created fourteen worlds in the past.

Lines 66—75.

Prose.—Also :—The great yōgi Achalaprakāśa has his body and organs purified by self-restraint and discipline, his bodily exertion is fully controlled by the performance of exercises in the āsanas (postures) of Padma, svastika, etc., he has conquered the bodily enemies (passions) by prāṇāyāma (breathing exercises), his organs are controlled by pratyāhāra and all the elemental forces of his body are controlled by the power of dhāraṇa (mental poise), his mind is concentrated upon the things to be meditated upon by the power of contemplation (dhyāna) and has realised the doctrine of the unity of all souls (sarvātmaikatva-tatva) by the power of samādhi (absorption of mind into God). He, the great master of yōgis, can be called the mirror of Lakshmi, the eight-fold yōga.

Also the highly auspicious sage Achalaparakāśa, the beloved disciple of Paramahansa, a treasure of righteousness, erected the temple of the god Yôganṛisimha bearing a yôga band in the village Śânti. To that god Varada Narasimha of the village Śânti, Viraballâladêvarasar granted hons? in the siddhâya of the village and also the hons accruing from the taxes on anyâya, pûrvâya and apûrvâya. The grant was made with pouring of water to last for as long as the moon and sun endure and a copper plate charter was also given to that effect. The mahâjanas granted for the above money grant two vṛittis including the income (prâpti) of the village Hirivûru belonging to the god Narasimha. And the officers (adhikâris) made a grant of ten hons out of the income from hodike to be paid every year to Achalaparakāśa and this grant was made in the presence of king Ballâladêva. The grant is made with an annual revenue, the śrikarapas (accountants) having granted palihata.?

Note.

This record contains the eulogies of an ascetic named Achalaparakāśa who is said to have flourished in the Hoysala kingdom and to have been highly honoured by the king Ballâla II (1173-1220). He is described as well versed in all the branches of learning then prevalent, including a study of the Vedas, Upanishads, Smṛitis, Nyâya, and Mimâmsa and is said to have been an adept in yôga. His studies are described as comprising even mantra (charms), mathematics or astronomy, music, architecture, medicine, poetry and drama and even erotics. His guru is named Paramahansa, son of Sarasvati Bhaṭṭa-nârâyana. He is said to have belonged to the Advaita, sect (sporting in the pure lake of Advaita). Achalaparakāśa is said to have realised sarvâtmaikatvatatva (doctrine of the unity of all souls) by the power of samâdhi. Nothing is stated in the inscription whether he belonged to the Vaishṇava or Śaiva sect. But his construction of a Vishṇu temple, viz., Varada Narasimha or Yôga Narasimha at the village Śânti shows that he was a worshipper of Vishṇu. The king Ballâla II, the mahâjanas and certain adhikâris (officers) and the accountants (śrikarapas) are said to have made some grants for the above temple.

The usual stanzas in praise of the Hoysala genealogy are contained in this record also down to the reign of Ballâla II. [See E. C. XI, Dâvanagere 25].

No date is given in the record. The reference to Ballâla II proves that the record might belong to the close of the 12th or the beginning of the 13th century.

The inscription is an example of the classical style in which many of the Kannada inscriptions of the Hoysala period are composed. A few lacunæ here and there make it difficult to follow the full meaning of some stanzas. The inscription is incomplete as it stops in the middle of line 75 where a reference is made to the grant by the śrikarapas. A Vaishṇava devotee by name Achalânanda is said to have flourished according to tradition near Turuvekere. He is said to have belonged to the sect of Bhâgavata Sampradâya. It is not easy to determine whether there was any connection between this Achalânanda and the Achalaparakāśa of the present record as the information to be gleaned about the former is very scanty and based on conflicting oral tradition.

*Translation.Lines 1-8.

May the Primeval Boar protect the king Vira Ballāla whose arm is able to support the earth and who possesses the great strength of the tusk of Varāha. A lotus was born from Vishṇu containing a four-faced being who became Brahma? He got a son Atri. Atri begot a son Chandra, who is bright with his digits and who is the nectar to the eyes of the three worlds and who is the founder of a great dynasty of kings. Of his race was Yadu possessed of great prowess, whose descendants were the Yādava kings. In his lineage was born Saḷa who, while worshipping the goddess Vāsantikā-dēvi, was asked by the ascetic at the place (to kill the tiger) . . . . . and the name Hoysaḷa and the tiger crest were borne by him and his descendants.

Lines 8-19.

In that family of the Hoysaḷas was born Vinayāditya who, dispelling the darkness, the enemies, caused the day to be born by his rays (hands). The son of the king Vinayāditya was Ereyanga famous in the world on account of his lineage, name and qualities. His wife was Êchalā who bore three children, Ballāla, Vishṇu and Udayāditya. That king who excelled Indra thus had three sons. Of these three Vishṇu was the middle one. His wife was Lakshmi like Indira, wife of Vishṇu (god). She had a fine son named Narasimha possessed of the prowess of Narasimha and an equal of Śiva in battle. By the sword of Narasimha the lions were punished. . . . . His wife was named Êchalā who resembled Dēvaki; and she got a son after worshipping the god Vishṇu. At his birth the earth became happy, flowers blossomed out. . . . .

By him the forts on land became reduced to heaps of dust where people could play, the strongholds on water could be used for water sports: (the heads of the warriors?) became balls of play. Even while young, Vira Ballāla was protecting his subjects, like the Pārijāta tree.

How can the learning of that king be described who cultivated it while young? His mastery of the arts could be discerned even in his playful talks. His face is the abode of Bhārati, his chest is the home of Lakshmi, his arms are the dwelling-places of the goddess of Victory. The queen Dēvalā, full of beauty married Viraballāla like the rivers joining the sea.

Lines 19-23.

In his delightful kingdom is the village Śānti, an abode of good things and a hall for the sportive dance of learning. Once an ascetic named Paramahansa came from Kāsi and he set up in the village the god Varada Narsimha. His disciple, a preceptor of the three worlds, famous for his good qualities, was Achalaparakāsa. Who could eulogise his learning in scriptures, branches of yōga and astrology. By the patronage of Viraballāla he caused to be created, ponds, wells, tanks, temples, etc.

Lines 23-28. (in Kannaḍa language) :—

In the Śaka year 1138, the cyclic year Yuva, in the month Bhādrapada and on Kapilāshashṭhi, the king, Viraballāla granted for the god Varada Narasimha of the village Śānti, five hons from the siddhāya of that village with all the taxes, deductions, discount, original rights, mānya, śrikaraṇa, customs dues, tolls, tax on arecanut, sêse of 1 haṇa, tax on warrior (?), tax on toḍaru (a badge worn by warriors on the right foot), tax on good cow, tax on good bull, tax on arecanut? (kaḷuka) kaṇḍikevana, tax on elephants, tax on horses, tax on princes? (kumāra-gāpika), tax on warriors (vijayabhravāṇa), tax on hammer, khāṇa, sesamum tax, tax on paddy, old and new sources of income, and the fees of the village accountant, etc. To this effect a copper plate grant was prepared and bestowed with pouring of water on Achalaprakāśa-svāmi. Be it well. Good fortune.

Lines 28-33.

Also the officers of the village Śānti granted with pouring of water ten gadyāṇas out of their hodakeya-honnu to be paid every year to the god Varada Narasimha, from out of the hodakeya honnu to be paid from the temple.

Be it well. Out of the neleya-hon (money grant) given by the king Viraballāla-dēvarasa, Achalaprakāśasvāmi purchased for the god Varada Narasimha two vṛittis of land with the prāpti (revenue) of Hiriyūr village and the mahājanas of Śānti-grāma gave away the vṛittis free of taxes to last for as long as the moon and sun and stars endure. For the money grant of ten gadyāṇas made by the adhikāris out of their hodikeya-hon, Achalaprakāśasvāmi gave away lands out of the siddhāya of the vṛitti which he sold for the charity (meaning not clear).

This bridge of dharma is common to all kings. It should be protected by you from time to time. Thus Rāmachandra prays repeatedly to all the kings who may reign in future.

Note.

This record is similar to the two previous records. It gives us the additional information that Dēvalā was the queen of Ballāla II at the time of the grant. Also it is learnt that the guru of Achalaprakāśa named Paramahansa came from Benares and it was he that set up the god Varada Narasimha. The additional grant of 5 hons out of the siddhāya of the village Śānti to Achalaprakāśa is recorded in this grant. For this Achalaprakāśa purchased two vṛittis of land from the mahājanas of the village free of imposts. A similar transaction seems to have been made by Achalaprakāśa regarding the grant of 10 hons from the adhikāris of the place. But the details of the grant made are not clear.

The record is dated Ś 1138 Bhādrapada ba 6 (Kapilāshashṭhi) and corresponds to 15th September 1215 A. D. taking the current year Ś 1138. Kapilāshashṭhi occurs on the 6th lunar day of the dark half of Bhādrapada in combination with Tuesday, Rôhiṇi-nakshatra and Vyatipāta-yôga according to Nirṇayasindhu (nabhasya-krishna-pakshā tu Rōhinī-pāta-Bhūsutaiḥ yuktā shashthī purāṇajñaiḥ kapilā parikirtita). This combination seems to have occurred on 15th September 1215 A. D.

Lines 1—3.

May the auspicious Varâha protect us:—during whose marriage with Bhû (Goddess of the earth) the seven seas formed the water poured into the hand (of the bridegroom during the marriage ceremony). As if remembering the various incarnations including Fish, Viṣṇu reclined in peace on the ocean. From the navel of that god sprang a brilliant lotus, born as if it were an umbrella for the lunar race of the future. From the pollen of that flower resembling dust Brahma shines with his different faces like the different poses of the damsel the Śruti dancing on the stage. (The text of the above four verses is corrupt).

Lines 3—7.

His son was Atri, the best of sages. From his eyes rose Sôma (moon) with his body full of nectar. In the race of Sôma was born king Yadu. From him was descended Saḡa, a jewel of the Yâdava race the constant use of whose sword annihilated the valour of hostile kings. In the town called Śaśa (Śaśapuri), king Saḡa was ordered by a sage in Karnâṭa language 'Strike, O Saḡa', and he thereupon killed the tiger by only a rod. His descendants were named Poysaḡa kings who were of handsome form like Manmatha, seeing whose tiger crest the hosts of enemies went to forests like the deer.

Lines 8—12.

His son was King Vinayâditya, a crest-jewel of Eastern mountain, the early kings, brilliant and great in war? (rapanâvadhîh). He had a son, king Eḡeyanga, whom the sea considered to be a big mountain since from him (from his fights) flowed numerous rivers of blood to the sea. His son was the king Viṣṇu who pleased the gods daily with his offerings to fire, and the Brahmans with his pious deeds, Bhêtâḡa with his wars, and the supplicants by his gifts. The hosts of his enemies were made to bend before his feet and were employed in protecting (his kingdom). King Nârasimha was his son: the camphor that is the stream of his fame made the three worlds fragrant. By great merit he got a son Ballāḷa like treasure, whose sight pleased the people and who was an ornament of prowess.

Lines 12—14.

The column of dust rising from the hoofs of the numerous horses subject to his command envelops the region of the sky and conceals the light of the rays of the sun. As if unable to endure the enemies to dwell even there the column of dust covers the lovely mansions of celestial damsels. When the strong man is angry who among the men even in the three worlds can have peace?

Lines 14—17.

He (king Ballāḷa) was full of dāna (making gifts or full of ichor) like the elephants of the cardinal directions. He was lofty (in character) like Mēru (mountain). He had a queen named Padmaladēvi. Surely did Brahma first create the digits of moon, most pleasant by nature and then obtaining skill of handiwork therefrom he created Padmaladēvi who is a pleasure to the eyes of the world. Otherwise how could that skill, that beauty, that brilliance, good fortune and glory be hers? Like the eastern quarter giving birth to moon, like the Milky Ocean giving birth to Kaustubha (jewel) she gave birth to the son Narasimha.

Lines 17—22.

The fire of his valour was kindled by the heroic Vikramapāḷa and Pāvusa, the Sēvūṇas, and spread by burning the kingdoms of Kēraḷa and Konga. The flames of his valour burnt even the Makara in the sea and Kāṇḍavādhiśvara (?) with their fiery sparks and burn up even other hosts of enemies remaining hidden in the sea.

The creeper of his fame appears in various ways before the eyes of men. Could it be the stream of Ganges shining on the sandy plain that is the globe of the elephants of the quarters? Or is it the moon's light free from spots? Or could it be the stream of the Milky Ocean white with the rolling waves?

Fierce with the skulls swinging to and fro in the blood of the warriors killed in battle and the headless trunks lifted up by the hosts of goblins and making the hair of the damsel of earth stand erect and the creeper of his spotless fame entwining, the story of the prowess of his strong arms stands firm like a pillar.

Lines 22—23.

After founding fine villages and performing numerous sacrifices and after re-establishing the Chōḷa (king), while the king Narasimha was ruling the kingdom:—

Lines 23—28.

There is a disciple of the seer Paramahansa, (named Achaḷaparakāśa), a treasure of austerities, free from three qualities, who showed his greatness by the control of breath, a pilot in the sea of yōga, possessor of great lustre by the gift of knowledge to others, subduer of breath, and possessor of the great wealth of true wisdom. Once he paid a visit to the king and full of joy he spoke to him about the business fit to be discussed (?) at the time of getting up from his seat? (or about the deeds which would lead to his spiritual progress). In the village named Śānti, a tank called Devataṭāka has been dug up, and the great Brahma appearing as a solid figure in the shape of Narasimha has been set up. Twenty-four eminent Brahmans engaged daily in sacrifices and fit to receive gifts have been made to settle here. . . . Hearing this the king became full of compassion and granted 30 nishkas to them from out of the taxes of the village Śānti.

Lines 28—32.

Good fortune. Be it well. The refuge of the whole universe, favourite of Fortune and Earth, king of kings, supreme lord, lord of the excellent city of Dvārāvati, a sun in the firmament that is the Yādava family, crest-jewel of the all-knowing, king over the Male chiefs, vanquisher of Malepas, terrible in war, Gaṇḍa-bhêraṇḍa, sole warrior, unassisted hero, Giridurgamalla, a Râma in the moving battle, uprooter of the Magadha Kingdom, submarine fire to the Kāṇḍava Kingdom, destroyer of the Pāṇḍya Kingdom, setter up of the Chōḷa Kingdom, nissanka-pratāpachakravarti Nârasimhadēvarasa was ruling the kingdom in peace and wisdom engaged in the expedition to the east:—

Lines 32—36.

The king granted to the Brahmans of the brahmapuri of the god Varada Narasimha set up by the sage Achalaparakāsa at Śāntigrāma, 30 gadyâṇas in money out of the siddhâya of the village in the system of trikandâya as a gift to the vṛittis of the brahmapuri to be collected from the siddhâya to be paid every year. This grant was made with pouring of water on Sunday the 11th lunar day of the bright half of Āshâḍa, the day of Dakṣiṇâyana samkramaṇa and vyatipāta in the year Sarvajit, the Śaka year 1149, to last for as long as the sun and moon endure, free of all taxes. A copper charter was also given to this effect.

Lines 36—47.

“This bridge of dharma is common to all kings and should be protected by you all from time to time.” Rāmachandra asks this again and again of all future kings. The great Vira Nârasimhadēvarasa granted 30 gadyâṇas to last for as long as the sun and moon endure. The adhikâris also (officers of the kingdom) made a grant of 10 gadyâṇas to be paid every year to the god Narasimhadēva. The king thereupon gave away the ten gadyâṇas to the 32 (vṛittis) of the brahmapuri. All together 40 gadyâṇas were given to the vṛittis: the following are the details of the vṛittis:

Two for the Trikâṇḍas, one for their māṇi (disciple, or son); for his nephew or son-in-law Yajnēśvara-bhaṭṭa, one vṛitti from hodakeyahonnu; for Pinnanna, two vṛittis and one from hodake; for Appanna Paṭṭavardhana, one vṛitti: for Sômēśvara-bhaṭṭa, one vṛitti: for Viśvanātha Manchyaṇa, one vṛitti and one from hodake; For Kēśyaṇṇa of Lokigundi, one vṛitti; for his Yôgaṇṇa, one vṛitti from hodake; for the Āpastambas, one vṛitti and one vṛitti from hodake: for the professors of tarka-tantra one vṛitti and one vṛitti from hodake; for Sūryadēva, one vṛitti and one vṛitti from hodake; for Lakshmidharabhaṭṭopādhyāya of Śrī Bhāgavata two vṛittis of 30 hons: for Maiduna Manchyanna, one vṛitti; for Peddi of Gaṇḍase one vṛitti; for Hariharabhaṭṭa of Diṇḍagūr, one vṛitti; for Rayidēvabhaṭṭa, one vṛitti; and one vṛitti for Trilōchanapeddi; for Dēvaṇabhaṭṭa, one vṛitti and one from hodake; for Svāmigaḷa Narasimhabhaṭṭa, two vṛittis; for his younger brother Kēśava Manchyanna one vṛitti.

Lines 47—54.

The aśēsha-mahājanas granted all the income from the taxes of Āneyamaḍuvu to its north including yerakuruva-benike (?) with pouring of water:—

Two vṛittis for Ananōnyabhaṭa's son-in-law or nephew Peddi:—for Mārarasar one vṛitti; for Sankaṇṇa, one vṛitti; for Sādhudēvaṇṇa's Trivikrama Śrīkānta, one vṛitti; for Pinnaṇa's son-in-law or nephew . . . one vṛitti; two vṛittis for . . . one vṛitti for Narasimha:—40 kambas:—500 kambas:—6 kambas in Dēvimgere:—481:—44 in Viṭhalabeyakere—61 kambas in Viḷanakatṭa:—in the big tank—480 kambas of dry land in Masapaṇahalli.

Note.

This record also belongs to the time of the ascetic Achalaprakāśa. It was issued during the reign of the Hoysala king Narasimha II. After the usual verses in Sanskrit in praise of the king and his ancestors the record deals with the charities made by the ascetic Achalaprakāśa, viz., digging of a tank at the village Śānti, setting up of a temple of Narasimha at the same village and the establishment of brahmapuri for 24 Brahmans engaged in worship or sacrifices. The ascetic went to the king and obtained from him a money grant of 30 nishkas from the Siddhāya (fixed revenue) of the village Śānti for the above Brahmans of the Brahmapuri. Some officers added to this 10 nishkas from their income. Details of the vṛittis are next given.

The record is dated Sunday 11th lunar day of the bright half of Āshāḍha Dakṣiṇāyana samkrānti and vyatīpāta in the year Sarvajit, Śāka 1149, corresponding to 27th June 1227 A.D.

The usual imprecatory stanza is also given. At the end of the record, several lines which describe the details of land owned by the holders of the vṛittis are full of lacunæ and some lines are lost, thus making it difficult to make out the details of the lands owned, etc.

The verses at the beginning of the record are very difficult to make out as there are several errors due to the faulty inscribing of the record.

It has to be stated here that the previous record of Ballāla II also registers grants for the temple of Narasimha at Śāntigrāma by the king. The present record registers additional grant made by Narasimha II, son of Ballāla II.

Be it well. While the illustrious Viṣṇuvardhana-Pratāpa-Hoyisaṇa-bhujabaḷa Śrī Vira-Nārasīnga-dēvarasa was ruling the earth :—

His . . . . . made the following Kārukaśēve (grant of tolls):—for the perpetual lamp in the temple of Varada Narasimha of the village Śānti, Sōvaṇṇa Dēvaṇṇa Rāmaṇṇa and Kāridēvagaḷ granted with pouring of water the sum of 1 gadyāṇa and two haṇas to be paid every year out of the collections from customs dues. The grant was bestowed to last for as long as the moon and sun endure

. . . . . Whoever is the Kôlukâra (collector of customs dues) in the village should pay the amount to help the above charity. God will help this charity.

Whoever destroys this grant will incur the sin of slaying tawny cows on the banks of Vâranâsi. He who takes away land given by himself or by others will be born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years. Good fortune.

Note.

This record registers a money grant out of the customs dues collected in the village Sânti for the offering of perpetual lamp for the god Varada Narasimha of that village. The grant was made during the reign of the Hoysala king Vira Nâra-singadêva. A subordinate of his or three subordinates named Sôvanna, Dêvanna and Râmanna seem to have made this grant through an agent of theirs named Karidêva. The usual imprecation follows next.

No date is given nor is there any indication to determine who the king Nara-singa referred to in this record is. It is probable that the record may belong to the reign of Narasimha II, as the letters seem to belong to the early part of the 13th century.

This is the charity of the officers of customs duties made on Monday the 11th lunar day of the bright half of Mâgha in the year Sarvajit.

Note.

This is probably a continuation of the previous record and registers the grant made by the customs officers referred to in the previous inscription, viz., for the lamps in the temple of Varada Narasimha at Grâma. This record contains the name of the cyclic year and the tithi of the grant, viz., Sarvajit sam. Mâgha śu 11 Monday ; but the date is not expressed in terms of the Sâka era. Since the previous record refers to king Narasimha's reign the present record may also be assigned to the same reign. There are only two Narasimhas of the Hoysala lineage who ruled after the foundation of the above temple, viz., Narasimha II who ruled from 1220 to 1235 and Narasimha III who ruled from 1254 to 1293. The years Sarvajit occurred in the reigns of both the kings, viz., in 1227 and 1287. In the first of these Mâgha śu 11 does not occur on Monday whether the lunar or solar month is taken. In the second of these also Mâgha śu 11 does not coincide with Monday. Either way the date is irregular. It is probable however that the record may belong to the reign of Narasimha II, son of Ballâja. The latter king patronised Achalaparakâśa-svâmi and helped the building of the temple of Varada Narasimha at Grâma.

This records the setting up of the brass finial on the tower of the mahâdvâra in the Channakēśava temple at Sânti by Śila Liṅgaṇṇa, a subordinate of the Dalavāy Dēvarāja Vaḍeyar. It was set up as a service to the goddess in the temple. The date given is Prajōtpatti Chai. 15. The record does not give the Śaka year. It is not known when the donors lived. The characters of the record seem to belong to the 18th century. Dēvarājavāḍeyar was a minister in the reign of the Mysore King Krishnarāja Vaḍeyar I.

Lines 1—2.

May the god . . . . bestow prosperity on Mâchirâja and Sântaladêvi for as long as the moon, sun and stars endure:—

Lines 3—18.

Royal pedigree: In the Hoysala lineage, full of prosperity (śrīpati), several kings reigned—after them rose Vinayâditya with his form full of brilliance spreading in all directions : King Vinayâditya's son was Ereyanga—his sons by his wife Êchaladêvi were Ballâja, Vishṇubhûpa and Udayâditya full of prowess and brilliance. Among these, Vishṇu-bhûpâḷaka, becoming king, crushed in anger the enemy kings difficult to conquer and protected in righteousness those who took refuge in his lotus feet and, attaining great glory, brought under his rule the whole of the land with Perdoxe (Krishṇa river) as boundary. That Vishṇu's son by Lakshmîdêvi was Nârasimha who was considered to be the Nârasimha possessed of great fury against the Hiranyaka, the enemy kings. To his senior queen Êchaladêvi, an abode of good fortune, was born Ballâldêva.

Lines 19—36.

King Ballâja drove away the enemy kings with all their opposing forces and conquering by his prowess the whole earth brought happiness to the goddess of his sovereignty with the willing assistance of the ministers and other officers, and thus attained greatness. May Mukunda who is an ocean for the waves, the branches of learning, whose feet shine with the lustre of the gems of the crowns of gods who bend before him, who is the root for the good creeper of fame and who brings happiness to all the great yôgis, and who is the husband of Lakshmi and support for the mansion of the earth grant all the desires of Ballāḷa. With his feet, like the tortoise, and long arms resembling the lord of serpents, and his determination resembling the great mountain, lofty in stature like the elephants of the quarters, king Ballāḷa protected, as if in sport, the damsel of earth possessed of beautiful curls (Kuntala kingdom) and a waist praised by all and a lovely zone (Kanchi city). Who can equal Ballāḷa on this earth in the greatness of splendour spreading everywhere? Is it the wild fire which burns up grass? Is it the fiery eye of Śiva which lives in association with linga (those who hug a stone linga in time of war are considered to have surrendered and would not be molested by enemy forces, but those who escape like this are considered to be cowards)? Is it the lightning which spreads its heat in the sky (who throws away his clothes: those who throw away clothes are also considered to have surrendered). Is it the submarine fire which hides itself in the sea? Is it the Sun whose light only extends up to the elephants of the quarters?

Lines 37—54.

(These are full of lacunæ and contain the praise of Ballāḷa. The last two verses in lines 50-54 praise his valour in conquering the fort of Uchchangi.)

Lines 55—71.

Be it well. Possessed of the band of five great sounds, mahāmaṇḍalēśvaram, lord of the excellent city of Dvārāvati, the Moon who brightens the lilies the Yadu race, ocean of truth, . . . . king of Male chiefs, a thunderbolt to Kaḷapāla, champion over the Malapas, a chintāmaṇi to the supplicants, crest-jewel of rectitude, destroyer of the pride of the Pāṇḍyas . . . possessed of these and other fine attributes, conqueror of Taḷakāḍu, Kongu, Nangali, Gangavāḍi, Nolaṃbavāḍi, Huliḡere, Banavāsi, Hānungal and Uchchangi, Bhuja-bala-Vīraganga, unassisted warrior, Śanivārasiddhi, Giridurggamalla, a Rāma in moving battle, Pratāpa Hoysala Viraballāḷadēvar was ruling the kingdom in happiness and wisdom in the capital city of Dōrasamudra.

Lines 71—77.

A dependant on his lotus feet: Salutation to Śiva. The chief of the accountants (Śrīkaraṇa), possessed of great virtues, foremost on earth, follower of truth, constant in good qualities, great minister, a Cupid in form, of good nature, and protector of good works, Māchirāja, son of the great Māra shines with his power spread to the quarters protecting all.

Lines 77—92.

That great man's wife Śāntaladēvi—possessed of great kindness, purifier of her honoured family, devoted to peace-making and dispensing of charities, possessed of bright glory by the favour of Amritēśa, endowed with a form free from faults, devoted to her husband: thus did Śāntaladēvi, beloved of the accountant (karaṇada) Māchirāja, shine on earth. The daughter of Chandimayya and his wife Chāmale, Chandimayya himself being the son of the prosperous Dēvimayya and Arasavve, and younger sister of Śankaradēva and Bammadēva and elder sister of Rāma, and wife of the highly praised Māchirāja—Śāntalē built the great tank Śāntisāmudra in Koḷatūr. The next five lines seem to contain the praise of the tank Śāntisāmudra but are full of lacunæ.

Note.

This record belongs to the reign of the Hoysala king Ballāḷa II and registers the construction of a tank called Śāntisāmudra by Śāntaladēvi, wife of Māchirāja, the chief of the accountants of Ballāḷa II. Māchirāja is said to be the son of Māra and his wife Śāntaladēvi is said to have been the daughter of Chandimayya and Chāmale and sister of Śankaradēva, Bammadēva and Rāma and grand-daughter of Dēvimayya and Arasavve. No date can be found. An inscription in the Śātēśvara temple at Chennarāyapaṭṇa also refers to Māchirāja and Śāntaladēvi and the construction of the tank Śāntisāmudra at Koḷatūr (Chennarāyapaṭṇa 116). Its date is Ś 1104 Plava or 1182 A.D. From inscription No. 9 in the present report we learn that bittuvaṭṭa was granted in 1180 A.D. for this tank. It is therefore probable that the tank was built in about 1180 A.D.

Translation.

Upper portion—

Be it well: on Sunday 10th lunar day of the bright half of Pushya in the year
Śubhakṛit, being the Śaka year 1282, the sixty-three mahāgaṇas got this stone charter of exchange written: Good fortune.

This is the charity (dharma) of the god Virēśvara.

Lower portion—

Salutation to Śambhu, who is the foundation pillar for the city of the three worlds and who is beautiful with the fly-flap the moon on his lofty head. Obeisance to [Virabhadra] whose weapon is śūla (spear) and on whose lotus feet, resembling sprouts, are found the garlands worn on the heads of Indra and Yama, and who assumed the form of Śarabha to destroy in sport the impetuosity of Nrisimha whose pride and insolence had grown excessive.

On Sunday the 10th lunar day of the bright fortnight of Pushya in the year
Śubhakṛit, the sixty-three mahāgaṇas of the village Virabhadra-Sōmanāthapura with the god Virabhadra (Virabhadradēvaru) at their head got the following stone charter written:—

The following exchange was made in the presence of the sixty-three after placing before them details of 11 vrittis in the villages Honneyanahalli and Kaḍaga Māḷayanāyakanahalli belonging to Mallarasaiya of Mārūḍige.

The four vrittis of beddala-prāpta (dry lands) of the village Honneyanahalli belonging to the Gaṇamaṭha of Daṇṇāyakadēvaru, Jñānasammaṇḍadēvaru, Vāgīśa-dēvaru, Nambiyannamgaḷ were given away to Koṇḍidēva, Sōmave and other maṭhapatis and to the sixty-three mahāgaṇas in exchange for the seven vrittis of beddala-prāpta (dry lands) of Kaḍaga Māḷayanāyakanahalli belonging to Mallannamgaḷu-beggaḍe, Viṣṇa's Vāmaṇṇa's son Viranna, Jātanna's son Sōvaṇṇa, Virappa's son Śivalingidēva before the sixty-three Mahāgaṇas and maṭhapatis and were exchanged with the pouring of water for the vrittis (four vrittis of Honneyanahalli) to last for as long as the moon and sun endure and the exchange śāsana was caused to be written with the consent of the sixty-three Mahāgaṇas, maṭhapatis and owners of vrittis.

He who violates this agreement will have violated the dharma of the maṭha. To this the sixty-three Mahāgaṇas, maṭhapatis and owners of vrittis have affixed their signatures.

Māsaveggaḍe . . . . . Āḍigola Rāmaṇṇa's son Linganna Kṛipāsamartha
Śrī Virabhadra : Śrī Basavarāja : Śrī Nambiyana : Śrī Jñānasambandha : Śrī Vagīśa :
Bharatanātha : Śrī Viśvanātha : Śrī Nityavarada . . . . . vāhana śaraṇu Śrī

Note.

This inscription was published as Arkalgud 47 in E.C. Vol. V. But the upper portion consisting of 28 lines and containing the date had been omitted. The stanza in praise of Virabhadra had not been included and the translation was incomplete. The inscription has now been published in full with a complete translation. An exchange of four vrittis in the village Honneyanahalli for the seven vrittis of Kaḍaga Māḷayanāyakanahalli with the consent of the owners of the vrittis and of the 63 Mahāgaṇas (Śaiva saints) and the maṭhapatis (heads of monasteries) at the villages is recorded. Both the god Virabhadra and the Śaiva saints are described as a party to the transaction.

The story of Virabhadra's fight with Narasimha is narrated in the Śaiva Purāṇas like Linga-Purāṇa in Sanskrit and in the Kannaḍa poetical works of Viraśaiva writers like Channabasavapurāṇa.

The date of the grant is given as Ś 1282 Śubhakṛit Pushya śu 13 Sunday. Ś 1282 is Śārvari. The nearest Śubhakṛit corresponds to Ś 1284. Taking this year Pushya śu 10 is equivalent to Tuesday 27th December 1362 A.D. and not Sunday as stated in the record.

Note.

This inscription is full of lacunæ as many letters are quite worn out and lost owing to the inscription slab having been used as a washing board for a long time. The inscription has got figures of anthropoid Gaṇḍabheruṇḍa, linga, paraśu, ḍamaruga, sūrapāna, tiger, etc., over it.

The record belongs to the reign of the Hoysala King Narasimha and registers a grant made by the Pāñchālas (artisans) for some temple. They granted a sum of hāga vīsa on the revenue realised from pancha-kārūka (tax on the five artisans) for god Eragē[śvara]. It was also stipulated that certain payments should be made by members of the community when the daughters, nephews or their children succeeded to the estate of the members who died sonless.

The usual imprecation is given at the end of the grant. The date of the grant given in line 14 is lost.

Note.

This is one of the five vīragal records found at this place. Of these, four have been published in E. C., V, as Arkalgud Taluk Nos. 37-40. They all belong to the reign of the Hoysala King Narasimha III (1254-1289) and record the exploits of some warriors of the village Kahigōḍu. The present record is incomplete as the first two bands of the vīragal are broken and lost. The remaining portion seems to record the death of a warrior named Lenkōja in a great battle and the setting up of a vīragal for him by his elder brother Bommōja with the help of the gaṇḍus.

The characters seem to belong to the 13th century and the inscription may be assigned to the reign of Narasimha III like the rest of the vīragals at the same place.

This record had been included in the Epigraphia Carnatica, Vol. V, as Arkalgud 92 and only three lines were given in the Kannada texts and no transliteration or translation had been published. The text has now been thoroughly revised and inserted here with a Note.

The record contains an agreement entered into by the mahâjanas of Sivapura, viz., the Brahman settlement at Malipattana containing the priests or officials performing specific duties in the temple of Uḷamêśvara, the chief of whom was Hariharanna. This agreement made with the temple or in the name of the presiding deity Uḷamêśvara allowed the mahâjanas or the Brahman temple servants to enjoy the village Tarikal granted for services in the temple consisting of food offerings, etc., to the god. In return they had to perform certain services for the god, viz., abhishêka (bathing of the god), mantrapushpa (repeating certain prayers after the final waving of lights before the god), vêdapârâyaṇa (reciting certain vedic hymns), offering of sandal paste, incense, waving of lights, food offerings, etc. The lands of the village were to be cultivated by tenants who had to give a certain share of the produce to the temple servants. These temple servants were permitted to enjoy the income in hereditary succession free of imposts but they had to perform specific duties as stated before in the temple. The number of servants or priests engaged in each of the above duties and the revenue they derived are also given as also their names. But there are several lacunæ in this portion. Some of the names of these priests are Sûrabhaṭṭa, Haribhaṭṭa, and Nârasa.

The date of the grant is given as Ś 1477 Râkshasa sam. Pushya śu 1, corresponding to 14th December 1555.

Translation.

To the holy Vijayanārāyaṇadēvar of Beluhura the illustrious mahāpradhānam Kumāra Lakshmidhara-dañṇāyaka presented . . . . . weight tu 81 pa 50.

Note.

This tripod in the Kêśava temple has been fully described in p. 61 of this report. This inscription states that the mahāpradhāna Kumāra Lakshmidhara-dañṇāyaka granted this for the god Vijayanārāyaṇa of Beluhura. Vijayanārāyaṇa is the name given to the main image in the central shrine of the Késava temple. The image is now known as Chennakésava or Késava. Beluhura is the name of Bêlûr.

No date is given nor any king named. The characters seem to belong to the end of the 12th century A.D. or the beginning of the 13th century A.D. Kumâra Lakshmidhara-dannâyaka is evidently the minister and general of Ballâla II, who killed himself on the death of his royal master Ballâla II along with his wife and several followers. (See the pillar inscription in the Hoysalesvara temple at Halebid.) (E.C., V, Belur 112 of 1220?).

The present weight of the tripod is about a maund. The exact significance of tu 81 pa 50 cannot be determined. If tu stands for tûka or weight and pa for pala, then what weight the figure 81 stands for cannot be made out.

Four letters are much worn out after koṭṭa and before tu, at the place where the object granted is named. The letters may probably stand for niṭṭanige, but one cannot be certain about this.

This is stated to be the stone set up to mark the boundaries of the rice land belonging to the god Mârkaṇḍêśvara and gifted by a person named Mârkaṇḍa Sâhaṇi. No temple of Mârkaṇḍêśvara is now found in the vicinity. Nothing is known about Mârkaṇḍa-sâhaṇi, the donor. No date is given in the record. The characters seem to belong to the 13th century A.D. Most probably the temple of Mârkaṇḍêśvara was built by Mârkaṇḍa Sâhaṇi, whose name it bears.

Note.

This inscription is full of lacunæ as most of the letters are lost in lines 1-12, being quite worn out and not legible.

The record belongs to the reign of some Hoysala king whose name is lost in the lacunæ and consists of two grants made for the temple of Dharmêśvara at Rājana Siriûr, the first consisting of a gift of some dry land for the illuminations in the temple, the charity being managed by the mahājanas of the village and the second consisting of the payment of a sum of 12 gadyāṇas (Pakshiśvara honnu) for some purpose not specified at the same temple by the Kālāmukha priest Rudraśakti of Atri-gōtra. There is also another money grant of ten gadyāṇas for the same temple but as the letters in the line (17) relating to this grant are much worn out, it is difficult to make out the details of this grant.

Two gifts of images to the temple are also given in this inscription. Heggade Nāgaṇa, son of Nāgagaṇḍa, is said to have set up a Bull (Nandiśvara) in the temple. The goldsmith Muddāchāri, son of Sanakka, (son) of Kêṭāchāri of Kega-pāṇi, goldsmith of Rājana Siriûr, purifier of his gōtra, son of the Êkkōṭi (7 crores of Śaivas), an ornament to the feet of Śiva, worshipper of the mahājanas, is said to have erected a shrine of Sūrya in the temple and set up the image of Sūrya within it.

The usual imprecations against violators of grants are given in the record. No date is given. The characters seem to belong to the 13th century. The mention of gōtras for the Kālāmukhas is not very common.

Translation.

Vāsantikādēvi caused to be made by Mallidēva, ornament to the Brahman family, brahmādhirāya, mūliga of Kapālēśvaradēvaru of Nekunda in Nekunāḍ, on Vaḍḍavāra, the 7th lunar day of the bright half of Vaiśākha in the year Ānanda, the Śaka year 777. Good fortune.

Note.

This short inscription is carved on the pedestal of the figure of what is called in the record as Vāsantikādēvi, but what is popularly known as Chaudēśvari, a goddess. This figure of the goddess is nearly 2 feet high and has four hands holding a cup, sword, trident and drum. Thus the goddess is Śaiva though she is called in the record as Vāsantikādēvi, who is generally regarded as a Jaina goddess who helped Saḷa, the eponymous founder of the Hoysaḷa lineage. It is also to be noted that the image of Vāsantikādēvi at Angaḍi which is identified with Śaśakapura, where Saḷa is stated in the inscriptions to be worshipping Vāsantikā, is also not a Jaina goddess but is Vaishṇavī. [See page 3 of this Report.]

The present record states that the figure of Vāsantikādēvi was caused to be set up by Mallidēva. He is called brahmādhirāya, chief of Brahmans, and brahmakula-tiḷaka, an ornament to the Brahman race. He is also described as the mūliga of the god Kapālēśvara of Nekunda in Nekunāḍ. Kapālēśvara is probably the same as the present Mallēśvara temple which is now in ruins. Nekunda is the older name of the village Lakkunda. The word mūliga seems to denote generally the original owner or occupant of some land or property. Here Mallidêva might have been the hereditary owner or trustee of the Kapâlêśvara temple.

Regarding the date Śaka 777 Ānanda, we find that Ś 777 is equivalent to Yuva and not Ānanda. The nearest Ānanda is Śaka 757 (expired year). The letters of the record seem to belong to the 10th century. It seems more likely that Śaka 777 is a mistake for Ś 877. This year Ś 877 corresponds to Ānanda 954 A. D. and the Vaiśakha śu 7 of this year corresponds to Wednesday. But if we take the solar month corresponding to Vaiśākha as is sometimes done, the tithi becomes equivalent to 11th May 954 which is a Thursday (which is regarded as a form of Vaḍḍa-vāra). Probably this is the date intended by the engraver and would suit the paleography of the record.

No other details are given either regarding the reigning king or his dynasty Obeisance to Śrī Gaṇādhīpati. Salutation to Śambhu.

Be it well. On Sunday the 1st lunar day of the bright half of Vaiśākha in the year Śukla, 1431 years having expired in the Śālivāhana era :—

While the illustrious king of kings, rājaparamēśvara vīra-pratāpa Śrī Krushṇa-rāyamahārāya was ruling the earth seated on the throne of Vidyānagara :—

Malluheggade, younger brother of Tammanaheggade of Kandalabali of Hōrināḍ in Yēlumalanāḍ of Kaḷasa executed the following stone śāsana of sale of land

(kaya-dâna) to Timmarasa, son of Râmachandradêva of Kâsyapa-gôtra and Ruku-sâkhe, son-in-law of Sûrappa-sênabôva :—

I have given away by sale the village containing Gurulike-bede-ya-makki (a plot of wet land) which was obtained by me as gift to Timmarasa, son of Râmachandradêva of Kâsyapa-gôtra and Ruk-sâkhe. The same has been made over with pouring of water by me, Mallu-heggaḍe, younger brother of Tammaṇa-heggaḍe of Hôrinâḍ in Kandalabali.

The four boundaries of the village—of the land called Gurulike :—to the east : west of nira-erakal (water-channel ?) of Doddagudde ; to the south : north of Hosadêvara-banada-halla stream ; to the west : east of the border of Hoḷegadde (river-land) ; to the north : south of the boundary stone set up after excavating in the north.

The four boundaries of the land bede-ya-makki in this village :—to the east : west of the stream from the hoḷeya-gadde (wet land of the river) ; to the south : north of the stream from the Munḍana-mâniya-bayal (wet field) ; to the west : east of the stone set up in the water-channel ; to the north : south of Birokkaḷabana (forest) :—

You may enjoy in happiness the eight rights and powers of possession including nidhi, nikshêpa, etc., within the four boundaries of the said Gurulike-bede-makki field. From this village a siddhâya (fixed tax) of 2 gadyâṇas is to be paid to the god Kaḷaśanâtha for the sôniyadharmâ service made by Bhayirarasa Oḍeyar, under the orders of the Heggaḍe of Hôrinâḍ.

In addition 5 haṇas have to be paid for this village for osage (feasts ?) when the turn for collecting one haṇa for each salage in Hôrinâḍa-sîme comes. No other payment should be levied from the village for biṭṭi (forced labour), biḍâra, kale, kambala, etc.

To this effect we Mallu-heggaḍe of Hôrinâḍ of Kandalabali have granted to Timmarasa, son of Râmachandradêva of Kâsyapa-gôtra and Ruku-sâkhe, the village of Gurulike-bede-ya-maki, with pouring of water on gold and with the consent of our wife, sons, kinsmen, dependants and relatives. You may enjoy the same in happiness along with your lineal descendants for as long as the sun, moon and stars endure. We have granted this stone charter of the sale of land with our full consent.

The following are witnesses to this : Chaudappa of Âtigodage ; Saṇṇu-heggaḍe of Âḍakôḍ ; Dêvara-hebâruva of Mâvinakere ; Gangedêvarasar ; Virâḷuseṭṭi ; Nanda Nâraṇaseṭṭi.

With the consent of the two parties the sênabôva of the village Hamparasa wrote this : the signature of Aratuvalle-heggaḍe with his own hand : Kûchaladêvi : the signatures of witnesses : Kûchaladêvi ; Brahmadêvaru of Âḍakôḍ : Śrî Kaḷaśanâtha : śrî Kaḷaśanâtha : śrî Vitarâga : śrî Vitarâga. Usual imprecatory verses.

He who confiscates land given from day to day in word, thought and deed is born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years. He who violates this grant will incur the sin of killing thousand tawny cows in Benares.

Note.

This record registers a sale of land near Kaḷasa by Mallubeggade to Timmarasa. The land consisted of a rice field called Gurulike-bedeya-makki and it is interesting to note that it is still called Gurulakke-gadde. The field is fairly large and is called a village in the grant. There is a reference in the grant to a chief named Bhairarasa Voḍeyar. Numerous grants of the chiefs of Kaḷasa and Kārkaḷa named Bhairarasa Voḍeyar are found in Mūdagera Taluk. These chiefs were subordinate to the Vijayanagar kings. The Vijayanagar king who is stated to be the overlord of the Kaḷasa chief is Kṛṣṇarāya (1509-1529). A fixed tax (siddhāya) of two gadyanas was levied from the land and this sum was to be utilised for the service of the god Kaḷasanātha of the village Kaḷasa called Śōṇeya-dharma. The meaning of this word Śōṇeya-dharma is not clear.

The date of the grant is given as Ś 1431 Śukla Vaiś śu 1 Sunday. The date is equivalent to 20th April 1509 which is a Friday and not Sunday. Even if the solar month is taken, as is sometimes done, the date is equivalent to 19th May 1509, a Saturday. Either way the week-day does not tally. The former date may be taken as the date of the grant.

Translation.

The illustrious Ballâla is a moon to the race of kings and causes the ocean of the Yadu lineage to swell up. He is endowed with terrible arms and is agreeable to damsels like Cupid. Seeing that the elephants of the cardinal regions are ever unsteady on account of ichor, . . . the tortoise never shows his face, the lord of serpents has several faces, the damsel of earth began to think to whom she should resort for support and ended by staying safely with joy in the rod-like arms of Ballâla full of good qualities and beautiful in appearance. That king was considered by the people of the universe to be a human incarnation of innumerable good qualities. He was lofty like Mêru in honour and a mine of precious stones and strong in the protection of those who submit to him.

Mâchirâja flourished (under the king), skilled in the counsels of the kingdom, devoted to (Jina,) whose feet are worshipped by Indra, and who was the possessor of great glory and strength.

Line 2.

Who on earth can praise Mâchirâja (sufficiently?)—He has surpassed Cupid in form, Kalpâdri by his liberality, Hêmâchala by his good conduct, the ocean by his depth, the Golden Mountain (Kanakâdri) by his firmness, and Indra by his splendour. That lord Mâchirâja's mâva (uncle) Ballayya became worthy of reverence in the whole world on account of his affording protection to all. Who can equal him in the assemblage of good qualities? Ballayya is possessed of accurate perception of things (samyag-dr̥ṣṭi), well versed in the meaning of all things, a treasure for the poets, learned men, bards, and supplicant Jainas. Who can praise him sufficiently? He can confer distinction on a man. He also knows how to protect another man showing compassion towards him if he submits, . . .

Baladêva would never allow his mind to turn towards others' wives. He is very kind to the poor, blind and helpless men. His fame is spread everywhere and his benevolence is well-known. He is ever devoted to the feet of Jina. May he prosper!

The above great minister of king Ballâla, Ballayya granted âgantuka to the basadi of Bhôgavadi for the constant worship of Jina. All the customs dues including duties on exports, imports, loom tax, Kâlabôvanahalli tolls, house, ner̥e-mala vattiyasunka, etc. . . all these did Ballayya who followed the path of Manu and who had a form like that of Cupid grant with devotion and joy for the worship of Jina in Bhôgavasadi.

May the person who protects this (charter) get long life and prosperity! The sinful man who does not protect this but gets angry will incur the infamy of killing seven crores of ascetics, tawny cows and persons well-versed in the Vedas . . . thus proclaim these stone letters on earth. They say that poison is no poison but the property of gods is called poison. Poison kills only one man but the property of gods kills even sons and grandsons. He who seizes land given by oneself or by others is born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years. "This bridge of charity is common to all kings. It should be protected by you from time to time." Thus begs Râmachandra again and again of all future kings. Be it well! While the mahâmaṇḍalêśvara Tribhuvanamalla Viraganga Ballâladêvar was ruling the kingdom in peace and wisdom at Dôrasamudra, the dependant on his lotus feet, mahâpradhâna sarvâdhikâri heggade Ballayya granted with pouring of water to Padmaprabhasvâmi seated in the throne of Akalankadêva, for the eight-fold worship of śrî Parśvadêva in Śrîkaraṇa-jinâlaya, all the customs duties of Bôgavadi including those of Kaḷabôvanahaḷli on Monday the 5th lunar day of Kârtika in the year Vijaya being the 1095th year of the Śaka era.

Note.

This records a grant of customs dues of the village Bhôgavadi (same as the present Bôgâdi) for a Jaina temple at the village by mahâpradhâna sarvâdhikâri Heggade Ballayya, a subordinate of the Hoysala king Ballâla II. Ballayya is said to have been the mâva (uncle or father-in-law) of the minister Mâchirâja who flourished in the same reign.

The date of the grant is given as S' 1095 Vijaya sam. Kâr. śu. 5 Monday. The date corresponds to 13th October 1173, a Saturday and not Monday as stated in the grant.

The donee is the Jaina guru Padmaprabha, disciple of (or spiritual descendant of) Akalanka.

Note.

This inscription is very fragmentary, several letters having disappeared in most of the lines. A warrior under the Hoysala king Ballāḷa is praised in the record. This warrior named Ballāḷa or Ballabāva is called a Bhīma to the army, the titled and a Bhīma in the Kali Age, a heroic Bhīma. He is said to have taken some fort and vanquished the enemies. He is also praised as a sun to the lotus, the face of the goddess of all wealth and learning. A prayer is contained that his fame might live for ever. The record abounds in errors.

No date is given.

*Translation.Lines 1—17.

Praise of Jina-śāsana.

In the ocean of the Yādava race arose like the Kaustubha, etc., several kings who were well versed in helping others and were possessed of all the royal qualities.

When a tiger sprang on Saḷa and he was asked to strike it (Poy Saḷa) with a stick, he struck it and the name Poysaḷa originated from him.

Vinayāditya who was an eye to the universe became worthy of praise by the whole world. He got a son, king Ereyanga, possessed of great fame, a Manmatha in form, destroyer of hostile kings. Three sons were born to him like dharma (piety), artha (wealth) and kāma (desire), Ballāḷa, Bīṭṭidēva and Udayāditya. Of the three sons, King Viṣṇu, though really the middle one, became the greatest on account of his good qualities and intelligence, the famous conqueror of all, both past and future (?)

Be it well. Obtainer of the five great sounds, mahāmaṇḍalēśvaram, lord of the excellent city of Dvārāvati, a sun to the firmament that is the Yādava race, crest-jewel of righteousness, punisher of Malapas, gaṇḍabhêruṇḍa, dweller in Śaśaka-pura, obtainer of boons from the goddess Vasantikâ, delighter of Brahmans by gifts and honours,—obtainer of these and all other good attributes, conqueror of Talakâḍu, Kongu, Nangali, Gangavâḍi, Nonambavâḍi, Banavase and Hânungal, Bhujubala-Viraganga-Pratâpa Hoysapa-dēvar was ruling the earth:—

Lines 18—25.

Dependants on his lotus feet:—The illustrious Mariyâne and the noble Bharatarâja-daṇḍâdhipa were born and shone like Bhîma and Arjuna, Lava and Kusa. Who can rival Jakkiyakka who is an elephant in her gait, a lion in her waist, with breasts resembling pots, with arms resembling garlands, an ocean of virtues with a face beautiful with glances bright like the sun, with braids of hair like a serpent, a Lakshmi in her splendour at home, possessed of a good mind and good heart, a jewel in good qualities, possessed of great fame, steady like an ox:—When all this is said of Jakkiyakka, possessed of a body with spotless brilliance, who can equal her? Ballēsa being the king, the great Mârâyar being the father, the excellent Jina being the god, which lady can resemble the fortunate Hariyabe? The mahâpradhâna daṇḍanâyaka Mariyâne and mahâpradhâna daṇḍanâyaka Bharatimmayya gave away with pouring of water Bâhubalikûṭa in the Pancha-basadi (five bastis) of Daḍigana-kere to Mēghachandra-siddhântadēva, disciple of Munibhadra-siddhântadēvar of Javalige, of Mûla-saṅgha, Kumḍakumḍânvaya, Kâṇûr-gaṇa and Tintriṇi-gachchha. They also gave away the rice lands behind the Mariyâne-samudra, the small tank in front of Maḷehaḷli, the fixed rent of the lands there, the small tank in front of Kôḍiyahaḷli, the arecanut garden behind the big tank situated near the dry lands—all these were given away free of all taxes for the 4 basadis of Dēsiya-gaṇa and 1 basadi of Kāṇūr-gaṇa, being equally divided among the five basadis :—

Māchigaṇḍa and Kasavagaṇḍa born here (are witnesses?).

He who confiscates the land given away by himself or by others is born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years.

Note.

This records the gift of a basti called Bāhubali-kūṭa within the five bastis of Daḍiganakere and grant of some lands for the same by the mahāpradhāna daṇḍa-nāyaka Maṛiyāṇe and Bharatimayya, during the reign of the Hoysaḷa king Viṣṇu-vardhana (1106-1141?). The priest who received the basti and the lands is named Mēghachandra, disciple of Munibhadrasiddhāntadēvar of Kāṇūr-gaṇa and Tintriṇigachchha.

For Maṛiyāṇe and Bharatimayya, see E.C., II, Sravanabelgola Inscriptions, Revised Volume, Introduction, p. 57.

Some letters are lost at the beginning of the first line. The record mentions the death of a person (whose name is partly lost in line 1 and the letters mayya only of the name are now left) by the rite of sinṇasana. This indicates that he was a Jaina who, seeing that death was approaching, devoted himself to asceticism and prayers to Jina. In the record the phrase eraḍa-nómtu is used for him. It means having performed austerities both internal and external. His daughter Biḍakka is said to have set up this stone (in his memory). No date is given. The characters seem to belong to the 10th century.

During the prosperous reign of the mahārājādhirāja rāja-paramēśvara vīra-pratāpa Dēvarāya-mahārāya, Varadeyanāyaka, son of Hiriya Honneyanāyaka of Bhaṭṭāraka-dēvana-Kellaṅgere alias Varadarājapura, constructed the temple of Mallikārjuna-dēvaru with garbhagriha, sukhanivāsa and raṅgamaṇṭapa and having thus rendered service to the god he next converted this village which was formerly a Śūdra settlement into an agrahāra. He also repaired the tank of this village which was breached and was useless and built a new tank named Varadarājasamudra.

All these services I dedicate to the holy feet of śrī Mallikārjunadēvaru. Good fortune.

Note.

This records various acts of charity including the building of the temple of Mallikārjuna at Kellaṅgere (Keḷagere) as well as the construction of some tanks and the formation of an agrahāra at Keḷagere by Dēvarāya of Vijayanagar (either Dēvarāya I or Dēvarāya II) who is said to have been the king at this time.

No date is given. The characters seem to belong to the 15th century.

On Friday the 5th lunar day of the bright half of Āshāḍha in the year Ānanda, 1536th year of the Śālivāhana era, Rāju Voḍeyar of Maisūr presented for the holy feet of Cheḷapīḷerāya the lotus pedestal (padmapīṭha) inlaid with precious stones (ratna-paḍi saḥa) weighing Paḍḍilāga 144 varahas and 1 haṇa.

Note.

This inscription is faintly engraved inside the jewelled Padma Pīṭha belonging to the Rāju Muḍi (crown of Rāju or crown presented by Rāju Voḍeyar) of the god Cheluvarāyasvāmi in the Nārāyaṇa temple at Mēlkōṭe, a sacred place in Seringapatam Taluk, Mandya District. This jewel is preserved as a valuable article in the Mysore Palace and sent to the temple on special occasions to be used for the god.

The inscription states that the lotus pedestal was presented by Rāju Voḍeyar, king of Mysore (1578-1617 A.D.) for the god Cheḷapīḷerāya. The date of the presentation is given as Ś 1536 Ānanda sam. Āshāḍha śu 5 Friday and this corresponds to Friday, July 1, 1614 A.D. The weight of the jewel is given as 144 varahas and 1 haṇa of Paḍḍilā variety of gadyāṇas. The present weight of the same is 42 tolas and the difference in weight comes to about a tola, due to wear and tear by use and also to difference in the standards of weight used.

Cheḷapīḷerāya is the name given to the utsava-vigraha or processional image of the Nārāyaṇa temple at Mēlkōṭe. It is said to have been brought to Mēlkōṭe from Delhi by the celebrated Śrīvaishṇava reformer Rāmānujāchārya and is an object of great reverence to Śrīvaishṇavas in the Mysore State. The jewel Rājamuḍi with Padmapīṭha is worn by this god Cheḷapīḷerāya or Śelvappillai (Sanskrit form : Sampatkumāra) once in a year when a special festival is held at Mēlkōṭe.

Rāju Voḍeyar, the donor of this jewel, was the first king of the present Mysore dynasty (known also as the Voḍeyar dynasty) of kings who conquered Seringapatam from the Vijayanagar viceroy named Tirumalarāya and established an independent kingdom, though in some of the grants issued for several years more the Mysore kings acknowledged the suzerainty of the Vijayanagar emperors. The presentation of such a costly jewel as Rājamuḍi by the king at this date to the god at Mēlkōṭe shows the high reverence paid by the Mysore kings to the god Nārāyaṇa and to Vaishṇavism. Several inscriptions of the Mysore kings state the tradition that the ancestors of the Mysore Royal Family came originally from Dvārakā to worship the family god Nārāyaṇa at Mēlkōṭe. (See E.C., III, Seringapatam 14 of 1686 A.D. ; T.-Narsipur 61 of C. 1725 A.D.).

This records the death by sanyāsa of a Jaina ascetic named Dharmasēna of Nandi-sangha. He is said to be the son (disciple) of Padma-prabha, himself a disciple of Śrīpāḷa, the Jaina guru.

No date is given in the record. There is a Śrīpāḷa-traividya, a Jaina guru referred to in several inscriptions. (See E.C. V Intr. p.14).

No date is given nor king named.

The old characters used, and the use of old and obsolete Kannada forms keydâr, viṭṭâr, alittôn, appôn, point to an early date for the inscription, 8th or 9th century A.D. A similar grant made by the lord of Punnâḍ Six Thousand in the reign of the Ganga King Śivamâra is found at Debûr in Nanjangud Taluk, and is assigned to 810 A.D. by Rice (Nanjangud 26). This record may also belong to the same period.

Good fortune. Salutation to Śambhu.

Be it well. In the auspicious year 1591 of the Śalivāhana era, during the year Saumya, on Tuesday, the 12th day of the bright fortnight of Kārtika :—In the presence of the lotus feet of the God Śrī Ranganāthadēvaru of Gautamakshētra known as Śrīrangapaṭṭaṇa, situated between the branches of the Kāvēri :—

While the illustrious rājādhirāja rājaparamēśvara, śrī virapratāpa Maisūra Dēvarāja Voḍeyar was ruling the earth seated on the throne of Śrīrangapaṭṭaṇa ; his son Kaṇṭhīrava-mahīpālaka :—

Kaṇṭhīrava-mahīpālaka, son of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar, grandson of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar of Ātrēyagōtra, Āślāyana-sūtra, and Rukṣākhe, granted the following stone śāsana to Nanjaṇṇa Vāraṇāsi, grandson of Chikka Nanjuṇḍabhaṭṭa and son of Subrahmanyabhaṭṭa of Ātrēya-gōtra, Drāhyāyana-sūtra and Sāmaśākhe:—

Whereas we have granted with pouring of water on gold, the village Horama-lalipura, a hamlet of Kottāgāla belonging to Huyasalanāḍ, situated between the Kāvēri and Kapilā and belonging to us, the following are the boundaries of this village which is to be enjoyed by you singly (ēka-svāmya):—eastern boundary, big channel; to the south-east, the black stone of Kembarehallā Hebballā of Atyaṇṇapūra is the boundary; to the west of this and near the small hill in the south-west corner of the village is a stone (forming the boundary); to the west of the village, Malledēvarabēṭṭa is the boundary; to the north-west of the village is a stone near Sāragadaguḍḍa at the boundary of Chāmalāpūra; to the east of this stone and to the north of the village to the west of the road to Haḷigere in the boundary of Ābalavāḍi is a stone near the banyan tree, to the east of Hosakere (new tank); to the north-east of Kāreṇāḷa near the lane of Kallahalli is a stone: to the south of this stone, the big channel forms the boundary: in the north-east corner is a stone on the bank of the Bidirameḷe (bamboo grove) channel—all together 7 stones:—All the eight rights of possession and property within the village including all the income from house, garden, lands dry and wet, fields depending upon rain for crops, fields which are artificially irrigated, smoke tax, house tax, customs duties on merchandise, loom tax, maḷiderige, tax on caste disputes, presents, kandāya, marriage tax, tax on income from movables will be enjoyed by you. You will also be invested with the four rights of mortgage, sale, gift and exchange.

To this effect Kaṇṭhīrava Bhūpālaka, son of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar and grandson of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar of Ātrēya-gōtra and Āślāyana-sūtra granted to Nanjaṇṇa Vāraṇāsi, son of Subrahmanyabhaṭṭa and grandson of Chikka Nanjuṇḍabhaṭṭa of Ātrēya-gōtra, Drāhyāyana-sūtra and Sāmaśākhe. You may enjoy this in happiness for as long as the sun and moon endure with your sons and grandsons, etc., in lineal succession. To this effect is this stone śāsana given. Whatever deficiencies may exist in the record, whether of omission of letters or of addition of letters, the śāsana is the authority (usual imprecatory verses).

Note.

This records the gift of the village Horama-lalipura, a hamlet of Kottāgāla in the Huyasalanāḍ, situated between the Kāvēri and Kapilā rivers, to a Brahman named Nanjaṇṇa Vāraṇāsi, son of Subrahmanyabhaṭṭa by Prince Kaṇṭhīrava, son of Dēvarāja, King of Mysore and grandson of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar, during the reign of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar, father of the donor. The date given is Tuesday the 12th lunar day of the bright half of Kārtika in the year Saumya, 1591st year of the Śāli-vāhana era, and corresponds to Tuesday 26th October 1669. Regarding this Kanthirava Bhūpāla, son of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar, there are a few inscriptions which record grants made by this prince during his father's reign. He was the younger brother of Chikkadēvarāja who later became king after his father's death. Apparently during the latter part of his father's reign, Chikkadēvarāja exercised very little influence, his younger brother taking a leading part in the government of the country even making grants to temples, priests, etc. (E.C. III, T. Narsipur 96 : E.C. IV, Heggadadevankote 57 and 119). According to tradition Chikkadēvarāja was confined at Hangala during this period and was released after his father's death and became king. The succession of Dēvarāja Voḍeyar, as king after another Dēvarāja Voḍeyar is referred to in several inscriptions which refer to the elder Dēvarāja Voḍeyar as younger brother of Rāja Voḍeyar who defeated Tirumalarāja and made Śrīrangapaṭṭana his capital (E.C. III, Seringapatam 14 of 1686 A.D.). Wilks in his History of Mysore (Part I p. 35) writes however differently. According to him Muppin Deo Raj, the eldest son of Bole Cham Raj, left four sons of whom the eldest son Dod Devaiya was an old man and had a son Chick Deo Raj aged 32. The younger or fourth brother of Dod Devaiya was also no more than 32, the same age as his nephew. This is the person who was selected to the exclusion of the three elder brothers and their male issue, although after his decease they again reverted to the same son of the elder brother at 45, whom they had passed over at 32. Wilks seems to have been considerably confused regarding the succession and had not the benefit of reading the inscriptions of the time. The Palace History "Annals of the Mysore Royal Family Part I" makes Dēvarāja Oḍeyar son of Muppina Dēvarāja Oḍeyar, who was a brother of Rāja Voḍeyar. It also refers to his two sons Chikka Dēva Rāja and Kanthirava Arasinavarū, of whom the former is said to have been sent to Hangala for acquiring learning and wisdom and only came to Seringapatam after his father's death. The younger son Kanthirava is said to have been present at Śrīrangapaṭṭana with his father (p. 95—103).

Be it well. In the year 1424 expired of the auspicious Śālivāhana era, on the 10th lunar day of the dark half of Āśvayuja in the year Dundubhi :—

Tipparasa Voḍeyar's baṇṭa (servant), Rāmarāja Voḍeyar granted the village Hattivāl in Hādaya-sīme and Mūḍaṇa. ḍiya-sthala to Hiriya Virayya Voḍeyar, son of Sōmayya Rāmayya Voḍeyar . . . . .

As we have granted the village Hattivāl as sōtra-guttage to you, you will enjoy the rights of possession of the said village including lands dependent on rain for crops, rice lands, dry lands, lands irrigated artificially, tanks, channels, boundaries, ploughs?, gardens, big and small, house-tax, loom-tax, customs duties, income in gold and grain and pay 30 gadyāṇas or hons every year as mukkaṇḍāya. To this effect is this sāsana given. All the rights of sthāna and mānya (grants to temples and individuals) in the village will continue as heretofore.

He who violates this and collects unjustly the taxes of alivu, anyāya (fines), bēḍige (benevolences), kâṇike (presents) will be guilty of the sin of eating a dead dog.

Authority for this :—He who confiscates land given by oneself or by another will be born as a worm in ordure for sixty thousand years. Protecting another's grant is twice as meritorious as making a gift oneself. By confiscating land given by others one's own gift is rendered useless.

Note.

This records the gift of the village Hattivāl (same as Hattidāḷu) to a Virāśaiva priest Hiriya Virayya Voḍeyar, son of Sōmayya Rāmayya Voḍeyar as śrōtra-guttage with a fixed assessment of 30 varahas payable thrice a year and free from all other imposts. The donor is Rāmarāja Voḍeyar, a subordinate of Tipparasa Voḍeyar. The date of the grant is Ś 1425 Dundubhi sam. Āśvayuja ba 10 equivalent to 25th September 1502. Tipparasa Voḍeyar was a subordinate of Kṛishṇarāja of Vijayanagar. See E.C. IX, Channapatna 24, etc.

This year evidently corresponds to 1818 A.D. as this is the only Bahudhânya occurring in his reign and the whole date corresponds to October 13, 1818 A.D. Bhakshi Bhîma Râo of Savâr Kachêri is also referred to in the Mysore Archæological report for 1912, p. 62 as having presented a silver horse vehicle and a Nandi vehicle to the Śrikanthêśvara temple at Nanjangûd in 1830 and 1834.
